Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) of 12 July 1999, Official Report, column 43, on the Edmonton incinerator, when he expects to announce his decision; and if he will make a statement. [91785]

Mr. Battle: My Department is still awaiting the formal views of the London Borough of Enfield, the relevant planning authority. Until the views of the relevant planning authority are known it is too early to say when a decision on the application will be taken.

BP Alaskan Pipeline

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to BP concerning the safety and maintenance of the Alaskan pipeline; and if he will make a statement. [91423]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 15 July 1999]: There have been no representations made; the safety and maintenance of the Alaskan pipeline are matters for the State Government and relevant local authorities of Alaska to pursue directly with BP. As a matter of general policy, the UK Government would always encourage conformity to the highest standards.

Textphones

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 12 July 1999, Official Report, column 42, concerning public textphones, for what reasons BT's plans have been superseded; and how many public textphones he estimates will be in service in 2000. [91946]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 19 July 1999]: BT's plans for public textphone provision are a matter for the company and for Oftel. I understand, however, that usage of the existing public textphones has been disappointingly low.

It would be premature at this stage to estimate actual provision in 2000, which may be affected by a number of factors including use of existing public textphones, and any new measures which the Government decide to introduce.

BNFL

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the stockbrokers consulted by KPMG as part of their work preparing the report into the Public Private Partnership Options for BNFL. [92059]

Mr. Battle: In carrying out their work, KPMG relied on views expressed in confidence by four leading stockbrokers in the belief that those views would remain private to Government. It would be a breach of that confidence to identify them now.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish in full the KPMG report into the Public Private Partnership Options for BNFL. [92056]

Mr. Battle: A summary of KPMG's report containing all its key points has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The full report constitutes advice to Ministers and contains commercially sensitive information, so it will not be published.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the reasons for selling a minority stake in BNFL, rather than a majority stake. [92057]

Mr. Battle: The Atomic Energy Act 1971, which set up BNFL, provides for the sale of up to 49 per cent. of the business. This would enable a Public Private Partnership to be introduced into the company, thereby bringing private sector skills and capital to bear on its commercial decisions.

Bribery Convention

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans Her Majesty's Government have to inform United Kingdom companies of the OECD Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions. [92122]

Mr. Wilson: Negotiation of the OECD Convention was concluded during December 1997. Since then, officials have been informing UK companies of its scope. The scope of the Convention was accommodated within existing UK legislation. Therefore, there are no new obligations for UK companies.

Shipbuilding (Credit)

Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes he proposes to make to the Home Shipbuilding Credit Guarantee Scheme. [92465]

Mr. Byers: I am pleased to announce today some significant improvements in Government supported shipbuilding finance under the Home Shipbuilding Credit Guarantee Scheme.

I am delighted to say that these improvements are one of the early outcomes of the Shipbuilding Forum, which I established last summer, to bring together all the major Industry, union and Government representatives to examine ways of improving the competitiveness of the shipbuilding sector. The Government are actively contributing to these outcomes. I believe that these improvements, recommended by the Shipbuilding Forum, will put the UK Scheme on a par with the best finance schemes among our EU competitors.

The Scheme, which currently offers soft credit financing support in pounds sterling and at fixed interest rates to help UK yards win new shipbuilding orders, will now be extended to offer support for loans in US dollars and euros and to provide DTI guarantees in support of loans at floating as well as fixed rates. It is moreover our aim that the Scheme should be more flexible in its operation and to this end loans under the Scheme will be considered in a combination of the permitted currencies. The Scheme will also guarantee loans for periods up to 12 years (previously eight and half years) for mobile offshore installations, including floating production storage and offloading vessels.

Floating rate loans will be of particular assistance as it allows shipowners to take advantage of the current low interest rates and make the Scheme more competitive and attractive to all.

Loans in US dollars recognises that shipbuilding is an international business and that the US dollar is the most widely used currency for financing the building of ships. It will bring our UK Scheme in line with other similar EU competitor schemes which already offer loans in US dollars as will the extension to loans in euros.

I am certain that these new financing arrangements, which the Industry have called for, will help strengthen the hand of the UK shipbuilding sector. The Government will continue to give the Industry every encouragement to improve its competitiveness and I look forward to working with the Shipbuilding Forum to ensure that we continue to achieve this aim.

DEFENCE

Military Personnel (Cyprus)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel stationed in Cyprus have been charged with drug offences in each of the last three years. [90821]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No British military personnel stationed in Cyprus have been charged with drug-related offences during the last three years. However, seven Service personnel were administratively discharged in 1997, having failed a compulsory Drug Test (CDT). Since then there have been no CDT failures. Nearly 6,000 people have been tested over the three year period.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 June 1999, Official Report, column 157, on the Chemical Weapons Convention, under what circumstances depleted uranium may be defined as a chemical weapon for the purposes of the Chemical Weapons Convention. [91763]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The use of depleted uranium ammunition is not prohibited under any international agreement, including the Geneva Convention, and there are no circumstances under which such ammunition may be defined as a chemical weapon. Article II of the Chemical Weapons Convention includes definition of chemical weapons as munitions and devices specifically designed to cause death or other harm through the toxic properties of the chemicals specified. Depleted uranium ammunition is designed to penetrate Main Battle Tank armour, or when used in the Royal Navy's Vulcan Phalanx close-in-weapons-system to penetrate incoming missiles, and so is not defined as a chemical weapon.

Trident

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on preparation for the refurbishment that will be required for Trident early in the next decade. [91565]

Mr. George Robertson: Work to provide upgraded refitting and refuelling facilities at Devonport for Trident submarines is progressing to plan in preparation for the first refit early next century.

Suez Medals

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account he took, in reaching decisions about Suez Canal Zone medals, of Cabinet minute CAB 128 (1951) in the Public Record Office for 29 November 1951. [92041]

Mr. Spellar: The Minute in question had no bearing on my decision on the claim for a campaign award for operations in the Canal Zone of Egypt in the period 1951–54. It relates solely to the implications of a declaration of Active Service for the control of civilian labour. The matter of Active Service is not the deciding factor as to whether or not any such campaign award is made.

Nuclear Weapons (Space)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to discourage the deployment of nuclear armaments in space. [91693]

Mr. George Robertson: The deployment of nuclear armaments in space is prohibited by the 1967 Outer Space Treaty. All the Nuclear Weapon States, and the four states yet to accede to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty as non-nuclear weapon status, Cuba, India, Israel, Pakistan, are members of the Outer Space Treaty.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92184]

The Attorney-General: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Law Officers Departments have been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Documents recording the advice given by the Law Officers (the Attorney-General and Solicitor General) are, by convention, made available to the Law Officers and other Ministers of succeeding Administrations in the interest of continuity of legal advice. By convention, the content of Law Officers' advice and the fact that it has been sought is not disclosed outside government. These conventions are referred to in Paragraphs 22 and 24 of Ministerial Code (published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997).

HEALTH

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue a new health service circular in respect of multiple sclerosis. [89850]

Mr. Denham: In April we sent advance copies of a draft health service circular on beta-interferon to the MS Society and drug manufacturers. The draft circular was withdrawn as soon as it became clear that the circular had not been interpreted as we had intended. We plan to consult the MS Society, the pharmaceutical industry, the medical profession and health authorities on a revised draft circular. The revised draft circular will make it clear that it relates to the use of beta-interferon for secondary progressive multiple sclerosis, and that existing guidance on the use of beta-interferon for relapsing-remitting multiple sclerosis [EL(95)97] continues to apply.

Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1999, Official Report, column 566, how many students the Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service placed onto courses in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [90964]

Mr. Denham: The Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service does not place students onto courses. It provides a centralised service processing all applications from individuals seeking entry to pre-registration nursing and midwifery diploma programmes. Applications that meet the entry requirements are passed to higher education institutions. Each institution decides whether or not to accept students in accordance with their own recruitment processes.

Each applicant can submit up to and including four applications for different higher education institutions. The number of applicants/applications that the Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service passed to higher education institutions is shown in the table.

Applicants	18,296	31,577
Applications	45,414	85,535

Dentistry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that dental students on qualification are offered incentives to set up practices in areas of greatest dental need. [90779]

Mr. Denham: Dental graduates who wish to become principals in general dental practice have to undergo a period of vocational training comprising placement at an approved practice and attendance at a locally organised training course. The Committee on Vocational Training collaborates with health authorities on the organisation and funding of the courses and seeks to ensure that they are accessible from most parts of the country. We will explore with the Committee whether greater priority should be given to areas with shortages of NHS dentists.

Incontinence Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor), 20 May 1999, Official Report, column 427, concerning continence services, what assessment he has made of the extent of compliance with guidance HSG (92) 50 and HSG (95) 8. [91947]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 19 July 1999]: Since Health Service Guidance (95)8 was issued in February 1995 National Health Service Executive Regional Offices have regularly monitored the implementation of local policies and eligibility criteria for continuing care. The most recent progress report was issued in 1997 (Executive Letter (97/62/CI97(24)). This report suggested that there should be three main areas where hea' h and local authorities should target activity—the development of joint investment plans, the development of recuperation and rehabilitation services and multi-disciplinary assessment.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made of the level of expenditure by the NHS on incontinence services in each of the last five years. [91944]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 19 July 1999]: Information on continence services is not collected centrally and no such estimates have been made. Local health authorities are responsible for commissioning continence services to meet the needs of their local population. The National Health Service Executive is reviewing continence service policy and plans to issue updated guidance shortly.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue updated guidance on continence services. [91945]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 19 July 1999]: Updated guidance is being developed in the light of the current review of continence policy services. We hope to issue this shortly.

Beta-interferon

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the clinical guidelines on the use of beta-interferon recently published by the Association of British Neurologists. [91851]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 19 July 1999]: The Association of British Neurologists (ABN) acknowledge the evidence that the efficacy of beta-interferon is only partial, moderate and not curative, and that their guidelines do not address issues of cost effectiveness.

The Department is likely to ask the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) for advice on the place of beta-interferon among the range of interventions and services available for multiple sclerosis sufferers. NICE would be expected to look at all relevant sources of evidence, which would naturally include the ABN guidelines.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Lake District Traffic

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to reduce traffic in the Lake District. [90375]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are funding the Lake District transport package to promote the use of public transport. Cumbria County Council was allocated £957,384 for 1998–99 in Rural Bus Services Grant. It has also been allocated the same amount for 1999–2000. It is important for the local economy that sustainable tourism is encouraged. The Government believe that integrated transport, with attractive public transport options, is the key to managing unacceptable car growth.

Great Leighs Bypass

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the criteria used to reject the Essex County Council local highway authority's 1999–2000 bid for capital funding for the Great Leighs bypass; and if he will make a statement. [90542]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 12 July 1999]: In the 1999–2000 local transport capital settlement, this Department was able to accept only five local transport major schemes. These included innovative public transport schemes where early acceptance was needed to lever in substantial financial contributions from other sources, the urgent replacement of a bridge on a vital route, and a regeneration scheme linked to a coalfields area.

Home Building

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many new homes were built (a) on brownfield, (b) greenfield sites and (c) in total in the United Kingdom in 1998. [91319]

Mr. Raynsford: It is provisionally estimated from data provided by local authorities and the National House-Building Council that 179,000 dwellings were completed in the UK during 1998. Information on the numbers of houses built on "brownfield" and "greenfield" sites is not available from this source.

Information on the proportion of new homes built on previously developed land in England is available from the Department's Land Use Change Statistics. The latest figures show that, in 1996, 56 per cent. of new dwellings were built on previously developed land (including new dwellings provided from the conversion of existing buildings, which account for 3 percentage points), and 44 per cent. were built on land that was not previously developed.

Figures for Scotland and Wales are matters for the respective Assemblies.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many new houses were built on (a) greenfield sites and (b) brownfield sites in Lancashire in 1998. [91399]

Mr. Raynsford: Information on numbers of houses built on "brownfield" and "greenfield" sites is not available. Information on the proportion of new homes built on previously developed land is available for Government Office Regions, but not for counties. Latest figures from the Department's Land Use Change Statistics show that, in 1994, 57 per cent. of new dwellings were built on previously developed land in the North West, and 43 per cent. were built on land that was not previously developed. These figures exclude new dwellings provided from conversion of existing buildings, for which reliable information is not available below national level.

Cycle Routes

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has issued for highways engineers on developing cycling facilities as part of trunk road schemes. [91292]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Lock, dated 20 July 1999:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Glenda Jackson, has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary question, about incorporating cycling facilities as part of trunk road schemes.

Guidance on developing cycling facilities as part of trunk road schemes is incorporated across the sixteen volumes of the Design Manual for Roads and Bridges. In addition, Local Transport Notes and Traffic Advisory Leaflets, designed for use on local roads, also provide valuable guidance for some trunk road schemes. All documents are available in the House of Commons Library. Highway engineers are aware of the need to provide for crossings of trunk roads by the National Cycle Network.

I hope this is helpful.

Abandoned Homes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of homes in England that have been abandoned by their owners; and if he will make a statement. [91401]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not collected centrally; however, the Government are committed to sustainable home ownership. Everyone with a mortgage or applying for a mortgage should consider carefully how they would cope if they experienced a drop in income. We are working with the mortgage lending and insurance industries to bring about better mortgage payment protection insurance, and encouraging lenders to provide more mortgages with flexible repayment arrangements.

We expect local authorities in their housing strategies, to take into account any problems of abandonment in their area, particularly in areas of low demand, where there may be a surplus of housing.

As part of the work of Social Exclusion Unit's report on neighbourhood renewal, a Policy Action Team was set up to look at the scale and spread of the problems of low demand and unpopular housing. Their work is being informed by a large scale research project commissioned by DETR in order to identify the causes and strategies for tackling low demand. The Policy Action Team will be reporting later this year.

Private Hire Vehicles

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 304, on private hire vehicles, what progress has been made in respect of restoring the position which existed prior to the decision in the case in the Queen's Bench Division between C. Benson and Copeland Borough Council concerning the personal use of a private hire vehicle by the spouse of the licence holder. [91295]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The representations on the consultation on options for broadening the eligibility to drive licensed private hire vehicles raised complex legal issues. Once they have been resolved, I will make an announcement.

Home Shopping

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has commissioned to assess the longer-term implications of home shopping for planning and transport services. [91447]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As I stated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 54, we will commission research into the long-term implications of home shopping on our integrated transport policy in general and for planning and transport services in particular. The study will also cover environmental impacts and will be commissioned later this year.

Cleaner Vehicles Task Force

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what conclusions the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force has arrived at concerning ways of reducing the environmental impact of new vehicles and improving the emissions performance of vehicles in use. [91446]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force is publishing its first report today.

The Task Force has developed recommendations that are both practical and cost-effective for reducing the environmental impact of new vehicles and improving the emissions performance of vehicles in use. The recommendations aim to:

Inform consumers through:

better information on fuel consumption, emissions and noise;

a clear vehicle label showing environmental information;

the promotion of improved maintenance and better driving styles; encouraging regular emission testing at minimal cost in standard vehicle servicing; increased low-cost emission testing facilities, and developing self-testing for emissions; and effective on-board driver information systems to give data on emissions.

Improve enforcement by:

developing road-side emission testing to target the worst polluters effectively; improving the MOT emissions test; and developing low emission zones, to improve air quality in urban areas.

Promote technological solutions by:

encouraging retrofitting for existing vehicles; promoting alternative fuels and the infrastructure to supply them; and supporting research and development into alternative fuel sources, new power sources and other technologies.

Support fleet operators by:

developing a greener fleet certification scheme; encouraging the adoption of voluntary targets; and providing best practice guidance.

A copy of the Task Force's full report has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Wembley Stadium (Transport Infrastructure)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the funding arrangements for planned transport infrastructure improvements for Wembley Stadium. [91497]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are awaiting Brent Council's borough interim transport plan submission due at the end of July. We expect this to include their transport proposals for Wembley Stadium and funding bids.

Red Routes

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has decided to designate (a) Vauxhall Bridge Road and (b) Belgrave Road as red routes. [91504]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Both Vauxhall Bridge Road and Belgrave Road were designated as red routes in 1992 in the London Priority Route Order 1992 (SI 1992/1372).

River Severn

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) Government Departments and (b) agencies which have statutory responsibility for the safety of the public on public highways adjacent to the River Severn in the Wyre Forest District Council area against dangers that can arise from the river. [91580]

Mr. Meale: The Environment Agency has powers to undertake flood defence works on designated main rivers, including the River Severn and is also responsible for flood warning dissemination in England and Wales. MAFF have policy responsibility for flood defence in England. The National Assembly for Wales has equivalent powers for Wales.

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what advice (a) his Department and (b) agencies responsible to his Department have issued for promoting and ensuring the safety of the public using the River Severn in the Wyre Forest District Council area; [91578]

(2) which (a) Government Departments and (b) agencies have statutory responsibility for promoting and ensuring the safety of the public using the River Severn in the Wyre Forest District Council area. [91579]

Mr. Meale: Neither the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions or any of its agencies has statutory responsibilities for promoting and ensuring the safety of the public using the River Severn. The Environment Agency has, however, produced general leaflets on the dangers that rivers can present.

Kapton Wiring

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to investigate the safety issues relating to Kapton wiring in planes; and if he will make a statement. [91541]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority has no evidence that the use of Kapton wiring in civil aircraft is a safety issue. There has been only one case recorded on the Authority's occurrence database since 1979 where investigations have shown that a breakdown of Kapton wiring may have contributed to an incident (which was not an accident), and that was subsequently found to be the result of a manufacturing fault.

The use of Kapton wiring in aircraft manufacture and maintenance is decreasing as new, improved products have become available.

Construction Industry (Safety)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the setting up of elected safety representatives and safety committees within the construction industry. [91717]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 25 January 1999, Official Report, columns 34–35.

Public Transport (Passenger Behaviour)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to make it a criminal offence to put feet on seats in public transport. [91550]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The regulation of passengers' behaviour on trains is already provided for in legislation which gives railway companies the right to make byelaws. The existing railway byelaws and London Transport byelaws make it a criminal offence for any person to wilfully soil or deface any furniture on a train, and this would normally catch behaviour such as placing feet on a seat. The train operating companies and London Transport are also in the process of making new byelaws, and have submitted them to the Secretary of State for approval. These include a provision that no person shall soil any part of the railway.

With regard to buses or coaches, the Public Service Vehicle (Conduct of Drivers, Inspectors, Conductors and Passengers) Regulations 1990 give drivers the power to remove passengers from their vehicle if they are causing a nuisance or intentionally interfering with any equipment fitted to the vehicle. These powers would be sufficient to deal with the problem of passengers putting their feet on bus or coach seats.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91889]

Mr. Meale: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minster for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116. However, the current number of individuals recruited under the New Deal is eight 18–24 years olds.

Countryside Traffic Strategies

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will instruct the Government regional offices to hold seminars to assist the dissemination of best practice among local authorities in the production of countryside traffic strategies. [91799]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Government Offices have been working closely with Local Authorities in the preparation of local transport plans (LTPs). Provisional LTPs are to be submitted later this month and we are currently considering the most effective way of disseminating the "best practice" which emerges.

The Countryside Commission, now the Countryside Agency, published, in 1997, an advisory booklet entitled "Rural Traffic: Getting it Right" which provides general advice on developing traffic strategies for rural areas. Further advice on good practice will be issued once the results of the studies carried out by the Countryside Agency's Countryside Traffic Measures Group are available. Officials from my Department are participating in these studies.

Sellafield

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what action he is taking to prevent nuclear contamination to the area surrounding BNFL's reprocessing plant at Sellafield; [91596]

(2) what studies he has commissioned to determine the effect nuclear wastes from Sellafield have had on the public (a) generally and (b) in Coventry. [91597]

Mr. Meale: Radioactive discharges must be authorised by the Environment Agency under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. When considering an application for authorisation, the Environment Agency must be satisfied that the possible radiation dose to those members of the public at greatest risk will not exceed levels prescribed by the Government. In addition, the operators must show that the exposure will be as low as reasonably achievable, taking into account economic and social factors.

Radioactive discharges and their effect on the environment are monitored by the nuclear industry under the terms of their disposal authorisations. The Environment Agency and MAFF monitor radioactivity in the environment and in foodstuffs. The Environment Agency conducts monitoring of drinking water, rain water and air quality on behalf of my Department, in addition to the monitoring it undertakes in support of its regulatory functions under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. The results of this monitoring are regularly published in "Radioactivity in the Environment" by the Environment Agency and in "Radioactivity in Food and the Environment" by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency. Also the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) publishes regular reviews "Radiation Exposure of the UK Population".

The latest edition of NRPB's "Radiation Exposure of the UK Population", published in 1993, estimated the average annual doses to the UK population from all sources of ionising radiation as 2,600 micro Sieverts. Of this 0.4 micro Sieverts was estimated to come from discharges of radioactive waste, the majority of which emanates from Sellafield. In a summary publication in 1996, "Living with Radiation", the average dose remained the same but the contribution from discharges had fallen to 0.2 micro Sieverts.

I am not aware of any reason why the effect on the public in Coventry should be different from the effect on the public generally.

Central Railways

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what contacts there have been between Ministers in his Department and representatives of or advisers to Central Railways; [91991]

(2) what contacts there have been between officials in his Department and representatives of or advisers to Central Railways. [91990]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This reply covers the period since 1 May 1997. No central record is kept of such contacts but I am aware that representatives of Central Railways have kept my officials informed, by way of meetings and correspondence, of their preparation of a scheme for a railway freight line between Liverpool and the Channel Tunnel. I understand that the last meeting took place last October. All contacts by my officials are without prejudice to consideration of any scheme that may eventually be submitted under the Transport and Works Act 1992. Central Railways have also written to Ministers in this Department enclosing an information brochure about the scheme. I am not aware, however, of any meetings between Ministers in my Department and representatives of Central Railways about the scheme.

Correspondence

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when the letter from the hon. Member for Thurrock to the Minister for London and Construction relating to the Minister's planned visit to Poland was received in the Department; to whom it was circulated; and for what purposes it was circulated to persons other than the Minister; [91977]

(2) if the letter from the hon. Member for Thurrock to the Minister for London and Construction concerning the Minister's visit to Poland was brought to the Minister's attention prior to his discussion with the hon. Member for Thurrock on 13 July; [91980]

(3) for what reasons the letter sent by the hon. Member for Thurrock to the Minister for London and Construction prior to the Minister's visit to Poland, concerning that visit, was not brought to the Minister's attention; [91979]

(4) what the circumstances were in which his Department's response to the letter from the hon. Member for Thurrock concerning the visit of the Minister for London and Construction to Poland was mislaid; and if he will make a statement. [91978]

Mr. Raynsford: I have now replied to the faxed letter received by the Department on 8 June. The letter was copied to the official in the Department who was dealing with the organisation of the visit to Poland for his information. However, as a result of an administrative error the letter was not brought to my attention until 15 July. I have asked officials to review procedures to ensure that no similar error occurs again.

Brown-field Targets

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to achieve the Government's target of 60 per cent. of additional housing to be built on previously developed land; what assessment he has made of Urban Task Force's prediction of the percentage which will be achieved by 2021; and if he will make a statement. [92066]

Mr. Caborn: A range of measures which will help deliver the Government's 60 per cent. target have already been set out in revised Planning Policy Guidance on Housing (PPG3), on which my Department has recently consulted. The Government are still considering the report of the Urban Task Force and their response will be set out in due course in the Urban and Rural White Papers.

Empty Government Homes

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department, the Home Office and the Ministry of Defence are taking to reduce the number of empty Government-owned homes. [92321]

Ms Armstrong: We are determined to reduce the number of empty Government homes, and today I have published revised guidance for Government Departments on how best to tackle their empty properties.

I am concerned that the figures for Government empty homes released today show a small increase. We are determined to bring these figures down.

Our new guidance is concise, user friendly and includes examples of innovative good practice.

I expect all Government Departments, using the revised guidance along with challenging new targets, to make a real reduction in the number of vacant properties.

Details of achievement against targets for 1998–99, and new targets for 1999–2000 are listed in the table.

Copies of the new guidance—"Revised Guidance on Securing the Better Use of Empty Homes"—have been placed in the Library of the House.

Thirteen on the market, 9 reallocated, 2 held to accommodate a decant from two blocks of flats that are to be sold with vacant possession, 1 being occupied temporarily for a police operation, 1 being used temporarily to house recruits during refurbishment of Peel Centre Residential blocks.

[2] ½ of all vacant properties are in the process of being sold. Clearer guidance being issued on demolition, selling and refurbishing options. Addressing with vigour the performance of agents (who manage ¼ of HA stock).

[3] The Defence Housing Executive's Chief Executive is committed to reducing the total number of void properties and has set a publicly accountable target to reduce voids by 13 per cent. by 31 March 2002.

Best Value

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to set up a body to oversee inspections under the Best Value Regime. [92322]

Ms Armstrong: The Best Value Inspectorate Forum for England will be formally launched tomorrow. This forum will provide an opportunity for the Inspectorates involved in best value to consider strategic issues relating to the inspection of best value authorities in England and will be an effective channel of communication for the Inspectorates with central Government, local authorities and other interested parties, on best value.

Separate arrangements are being made to oversee best value inspection in Wales.

Environment Agency

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements are being made to appoint a chairman of the Environment Agency. [92358]

Mr. Meacher: The current chairman of the Environment Agency, Lord De Ramsey, has announced his intention to retire at the beginning of next year.

I have appointed recruitment consultants to assist in identifying suitable candidates to succeed Lord De Ramsey, and the post is being advertised in the national press.

This is a key appointment. The Environment Agency plays a central part in protecting and enhancing the environment in England and Wales. It has major responsibilities for managing and regulating the water environment, and for controlling industrial pollution and wastes. The role of chairman in determining the strategic direction of the Agency, inspiring its staff, and ensuring that it discharges its statutory duties is vital to the continued improvements in the environment which we are seeking.

The successful candidate will need to have the skills, experience, ability and vision to lead a major public sector organisation with a budget of over £600 million per year and over 9,000 employees, and to develop a successful relationship with the wide range of bodies who have dealings with the Agency. I welcome interest from people, from all sectors of the community, who measure up to the special and demanding requirements of this appointment.

Trains (Safety Systems)

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the efficacy of the cup and cone safety system for passenger carriages on trains. [90763]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive has carried out tests of this safety system and is satisfied that it would significantly improve the safety of Mark 1 rolling stock.

The Deputy Prime Minister has announced today the elimination of all Mark 1 rolling stock from the network by the end of 2004. We expect to see the bulk of such trains phased out substantially before then, but any remaining on the network after the end of 2002 will need to be safety modified in order to remain in operation until the end of 2004.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Women's Ordination

Mr. Field: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell), representing the Church Commissioners, what is the cumulative cost to date of the financial compensation package for those priests unwilling to accept women's ordination; and if he will estimate the total cumulative cost at the end of the 10 year guarantee period. [91657]

Mr. Stuart Bell: At 31 December 1998 the cumulative gross cost, to be met from the Commissioners' income, under the terms of the Ordination of Women (Financial Provisions) Measure 1993, was £13.5 million. The Commissioners' latest estimate of the total cumulative gross cost to the end of the guaranteed period is approximately £23 million. The figure is based on our current prediction of 400 resignations by 21 February 2004, and estimates for payments up to 21 February 2014.

Actual expenditure up to 31 December 1998 and illustrative costings based on 400 resignations are set out in the following table. It should be noted that from 1 January 1998, these costings include pension contributions towards the new funded clergy pension scheme, approximately £0.49 million in 1998.

Notes:

1. The number of resignations shown (400) is a broad estimate based on current assumptions and knowledge of proposed resignations.
2. Actual costs are shown for 1994 to 1998 based on resignations shown, including housing subsidy. A similar pattern of costs has been projected for future years.
3. The figures for 1998 onwards also include pension contributions for resigning clergy paid to the Pensions Board.
4. The figures make allowance for future increases in house prices and stipends.
5. The net figure takes account of such variables as stipends savings (assuming at least a temporary reduction in the payroll), allowance for retirement housing provision which would otherwise have arisen on retirement, and the possibility of some people redeeming loans or leaving rented accommodation once they have obtained alternative employment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud (Merseyside)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what collaborative projects his Department has undertaken with the Merseyside Police Authority to combat fraudulent activities; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of these projects. [90772]

Mr. Timms: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Claire Curtis-Thomas, dated 19 July 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question asking what collaborative projects his Department has undertaken with the Merseyside Police Authority on fraudulent activities; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of these projects.

Benefit Fraud in Merseyside is investigated by the Benefits Fraud Investigation Service (BFIS) and Benefit Agency Security Investigation Services (BASIS). Neither are engaged in collaborative projects with Merseyside Police. However, both services do work closely with Merseyside Police on individual cases as operational requirements dictate.

Joint projects also exist to tackle abuse in known areas of benefit fraud such as investigations into taxi drivers, small businesses and the manipulation of girocheques and orderbooks. Although no specific statistics are kept on the partnerships, the fact that these operations are regular and ongoing is a testament to their level of success.

The Benefits Agency (BA) is negotiating a National Memorandum of Understanding with the Association Of Chief Police Officers. This will improve lines of communication, clarify the responsibilities of the police and BA and provide guidelines for co-operation on operational issues.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Incapacity and Disablement Benefit

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the total numbers of (a) incapacity benefit claimants and (b) disablement benefit claimants in (i) Barnsley, (ii) Rotherham, (iii) Sheffield and (iv) Doncaster; and what is the age profile of the claimants in each case. [91940]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of incapacity and disablement benefit claims is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Michael Clapham, dated 19 July 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the total numbers and age profile of Incapacity Benefit and Disablement Benefit claimants in the Barnsley, Rotherham, Sheffield and Doncaster areas.

Child Support

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to reform the Child Support Act 1991; [91594]

(2) what plans he has to encourage parents to reach amicable agreements with free help and advice provided by the Government, in the matter of child maintenance. [91595]

Angela Eagle: The White Paper "A new contract for welfare: Children's Rights and Parents Responsibilities" (Cm 4349) published on 1 July 1999 sets out our plans to reform the child support system. We are creating a new, customer focused, child support service that will be simple, easy to understand, and ensure that more children receive regular and reliable maintenance.

Parents not on benefit will, as now, be free to make their own arrangements without involving the Child Support Agency, where necessary using the new, simple child support rates as a guideline.

Under the provision of Part III of the Family Law Act 1996 publicly funded mediation is available for disputes relating to children and property arising on divorce or separation. These provisions are being implemented on an area by area basis throughout England and Wales.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many Child Support Agency cases were uncleared after (a) 78 weeks and (b) 104 weeks on 31 March; [92147]

(2) how many, and what proportion of, applications for maintenance to the Child Support Agency dating from after (a) 31 March 1997, (b) 30 September 1997 and (c) 31 March 1998 were uncleared 52 weeks later. [92148]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. Frank Field, dated 20 July 1999:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

The information requested in your questions is not available. Whilst the Agency maintains systems to monitor and report on performance, the specific figures you have asked for would require a scan of our computer system. This would take several weeks to arrange and deflect resources from other important development work.

In 1998/99 the Agency had a Secretary of State's target to have no applications over 52 weeks old by 31 March 1999. All Business Units put in place operational plans that were to guide them towards the achievement of this objective.

The introduction of automated management information systems and the subsequent exercise to check and correct the status of our cases identified that the original estimate of 225,000 backlog cases (i.e. over 52 weeks old) was considerably understated. In fact CSA cleared 324,859 cases, but did not achieve a nil backlog.

The Agency's ability to clear all these cases was impacted by "new" cases becoming over 52 weeks old and because those cases outstanding tend to be older, more complex cases which are difficult to progress.

The introduction of Decision Making and Appeals (DMA) in June 1999 will significantly help the Agency to maintain a normal level of work.

I hope this is helpful.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92171]

Mr. Darling: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dressed Lamb Carcases

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria are used by official veterinary surgeons employed by the Meat Hygiene Service to determine whether wool fibres on the surfaces of dressed lamb carcases, transferred during the slaughtering process, comprise unacceptable contamination; and what quantity of fibre is permitted. [88290]

Mr. Rooker: Official Veterinary Surgeons are required to use their professional judgment to determine whether wool fibres on the surfaces of dressed lamb carcases, transferred during the slaughtering process, comprise unacceptable contamination.

Thames Barrier

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the design life of the Thames Barrier; and if he will make a statement. [91403]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 2 February 1999, Official Report, column 656. The design life of the Barrier is 60 [illegible]—i.e. to the year 2030. This design life was based on rates of sea level rise predicted in the 1970s, which were higher than those currently anticipated. With normal care and maintenance the Barrier should continue to provide London with a high level of protection from tidal flooding until at least the latter part of the next century. The Environment Agency is considering the wider long-term flood defence needs of London following consultation with interested parties.

Flood Defences (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent by the Environment Agency on improving flood defences in Leicestershire since Easter 1998. [91313]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency has a regular programme of work to maintain and improve main river watercourses in Leicestershire. Since Easter 1998, this has involved expenditure of £570,000.

Dairy Farming

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the prospects for the dairy farming sector. [91419]

Mr. Rooker: Dairy farmers face challenging times as a result of reduced milk prices, increasing liberalisation of world markets, and progress on CAP reform. But the dairy farming sector's ability to respond positively to these challenges will be helped by the high level of producer expertise and commitment, favourable farm structure and ideal climate for milk production.

GM Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances licences for the use of glufosinate or glyphosate on herbicide-tolerant genetically modified crops may be granted before the completion of the farm-scale trials with herbicide-tolerant genetically modified crops in 2003. [91414]

Mr. Rooker: No herbicide will be approved for use with genetically modified herbicide-tolerant crops unless a thorough and specific evaluation of the possible effects on people and on the environment has identified no unacceptable risks. Moreover, until a genetically modified herbicide tolerant crop is itself legally on the market in this country I do not expect to grant an approval for use on that crop to any herbicide products containing glufosinate or glyphosate.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) of 8 July 1999, Official Report, column 626, on the Common Fisheries Policy, if his statement on the majority of fish discarded being undersize is based upon the (a) numbers and (b) weight of discard; and what estimate he has made of undersize discards as a percentage of total discards. [91768]

Mr. Morley: Sampling of discards in the North Sea in 1997 by CEFAS indicated that, by number, the majority of discarded cod, haddock and whiting were undersized fish. The actual estimates of the proportions of discarded fish, by number, that were undersized were cod 82 per cent., haddock 57 per cent. and whiting 67 per cent.

By weight the percentages were cod 73 per cent., haddock 46 per cent. and whiting 53 per cent.

Badgers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents there have been where his Department's field staff in the randomised badger culling trial have been (a) threatened and (b) assaulted. [91712]

Mr. Rooker: It would not be appropriate to release this information for operational and security reasons.

The safety of staff is the Department's paramount concern, and we take very seriously any incident where this is put at risk. The Department is committed to supporting prosecutions in the event of damage to property or threats to, and attacks on, staff.

The Government are committed to the field trial as an important part of their comprehensive research and control strategy to tackle TB in cattle. The strategy, including the trial, is based on the best independent scientific advice. The aim is to place future TB policy on an effective and sustainable scientific footing. Disruption of the trial risks delaying its results and so helps neither badgers nor cattle.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons badger culling in the randomised culling trial has not started in the proactive area of the triplet in the Forest of Dean. [91706]

Mr. Rooker: A range of work is being carried out in the four triplets so far identified. For operational and security reasons it would not be appropriate to give details of specific operations.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when badger culling in the Krebs Trial started in the Hartland reactive area of the North Devon triplet. [91707]

Mr. Rooker: The closed season for the Krebs/Bourne field trial ended on 30 April. Since then, culling has resumed in some areas. For operational and security reasons, it would not be appropriate to give details.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many new staff have been (a) sought and (b) appointed for the randomised badger culling trial; and what procedures have been established to ensure the training of new staff. [91705]

Mr. Rooker: Approximately 60 new staff are being appointed to work on the trial, 48 are already in post and others will start work shortly. All new staff receive comprehensive training which includes a period of supervised working alongside experienced colleagues.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle were slaughtered in 1997 and 1998 after testing positive in the tuberculin skin tests; and how many were found not to be infected on post mortem and culture examination. [91711]

Mr. Rooker: The information for 1997 was published on page 4 of Animal Health 1997, the annual report of the Chief Veterinary Officer. A copy was placed in the Library. The report for 1998 has not yet been published.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is conducting into cattle to cattle transmission of bovine tuberculosis. [91725]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are conducting a wide programme of research, based on the recommendations in the Krebs Report and advice from the Independent Scientific Group on cattle TB chaired by Professor John Bourne. Specifically on cattle to cattle transmission the recommendations were:

(i) analysing existing information (including cattle testing data and old TB49 incident management reports) to identify risk factors;

(ii) deploying a new epidemiological questionnaire (TB99) to provide data which will assist in improving procedures for managing TB incidents and to help determine risk factors associated with them;

(iii) working on the development of a blood test based on gamma interferon in order to improve the detection of infected cattle;

(iv) developing the tools for improving the identification of different strains of m bovis to provide information on source of infection and route of transmission, and for application to other cattle data; and

(v) implementing a number of projects related to the development of a cattle vaccine that include work on the pathogenesis on infection.

The Independent Scientific Group believes, and the Government agree, that cattle to cattle transmission, including the pathogenesis of the disease in cattle, is an area which merits further consideration as funds become available.

Sulphuric Acid

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances farmers are permitted to spray sulphuric acid on potato fields. [91733]

Mr. Rooker: When applied to potatoes for the purpose of desiccating haulms, sulphuric acid falls within the definition of a pesticide. Pesticides may be used only if they are approved by Ministers following assessment of their impact on human health and the environment. The use of sulphuric acid on potato crops has been approved subject to a number of restrictions and requirements, of which the main ones are:

only 77 per cent. clean "sulphur burnt" sulphuric acid may be used; application is permitted only between 1 May and 15 November; the maximum dose permitted is 340 litres/hectare (800 litres per hectare for potatoes grown for canning);

a written COSHH assessment must be made before use. Operator exposure must be controlled by means of personal protective equipment and/or engineering controls; application must be by operators holding a recognised certificate of competence in the use of the relevant equipment; at least 24 hours written notice must be provided to immediate neighbours and notices must be posted on adjacent roads and paths and kept in place for at least 96 hours after treatment. Unprotected persons must be kept out of treated areas for at least 96 hours following treatment.

Beef Export Ban

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the EU Commission has agreed to lift the beef export ban from 1 August. [91898]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission has agreed that exports of boneless UK beef produced under the Date-based Export Scheme (DBES) may start from 1 August. The Commission announced this on 14 July, and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food reported it to the House in his statement of 14 July 1999, Official Report, column 405–16.

Non-food Crops

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to promote long-term development of non-food crops; and what assessment he has made of the potential for development of non-food crops in the UK. [91589]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 19 July 1999]: We believe there is considerable potential to develop the use of non-food crops in the UK. The Ministry's Agri-Industrial Materials Branch promotes the use of crop derived raw materials at workshops and other events and through its dedicated Website. The Ministry spends around £1.1 million per annum on strategic research on non-food crops with a number of projects looking at the potential for these renewable raw materials. Most recently the Ministry's Central Science Laboratory has led an EU project on the opportunities and constraints for non-food crops and the report will be published in the autumn. We are currently examining the scope to support the establishment of energy crops under the new Rural Development Regulation.

Mr. Michael: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Welsh Office has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration as set out in the Prime Minister's reply on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Ms Quin: The Cologne European Council on 3–4 June decided that an Inter-Governmental Conference should begin in early 2000 to prepare the Union's institutions for enlargement.

Preparations for the IGC are now beginning. We expect the Finnish Presidency to hold meetings at both official and ministerial level in the coming months.

EU Enlargement

19. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what measures the UK has participated to assist candidate members of the EU to meet the terms of environmental directives prior to entry. [90475]

Ms Quin: The UK fully supports the important goal of helping all the applicant countries meet the EU's environmental standards, and we are working to achieve this through projects for the Know How Fund, through the EC's Twinning Scheme and through contributions to PHARE and other funding programmes.

22. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet his European counterparts to discuss the enlargement of the European Union. [90

Ms Quin: As I mentioned in the House earlier today, enlargement is a key priority of the Government and of the European Union. It, therefore, is a constant feature of all my contacts with my colleagues from EU member states and applicants. Our next full discussion will be at the Foreign Ministers' Informal Meeting in Finland on 4–5 September.

23. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of bilateral relations between Britain and Spain over Gibraltar. [90480]

Ms Quin: Our bilateral relations with Spain are generally good. We work together on a wide range of EU, NATO and other issues and want our relations to continue to improve. But we have made clear to Spain on several occasions that recent actions affecting Gibraltar, notably at the border, are unacceptable and counterproductive. We will continue to defend Gibraltar's interests while looking for ways to ease tension and increase confidence through dialogue and co-operation.

Kosovo

25. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Kosovo. [90482]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: NATO'S key objectives have been achieved. There are now 33,000 KFOR troops in Kosovo, under the command of General Sir Michael Jackson. KFOR's objective is to provide robust and even-handed support for all the citizens of Kosovo regardless of ethnic, religious or cultural background. The Secretary-General of the UN has made appointments to the key positions to the UN Mission in Kosovo whose work is underway. The UK will continue to play a leading role in support of both KFOR and UNMIK.

POWs (Japan)

26. Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to discuss the issue of former prisoners of war with the Japanese Government. [90483]

We regularly discuss with the Japanese ways to promote reconciliation.

UN General Assembly

27. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on parliamentary participation in the work of the United Nations General Assembly. [90484]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We welcome and encourage parliamentary interest in the work of the United Nations (UN) and its organs. To this end, we organise and fund an all-party visit by Members of Parliament to the UN during the General Assembly every year. This provides an opportunity for participants to exchange views with senior UN representatives and to bring their insights back to their parliamentary work in London. We also support the strengthening of the ties between the Interparliamentary Union and the UN under their 1996 Co-operation Agreement; and between the Council of Europe and the UN.

Middle East

29. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for peace in the middle east. [90486]

32. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the middle east peace process since the general election in Israel. [90489]

Aid projects include the development of health and infrastructure facilities, support for refugees and technical assistance for economic negotiations. In addition, we expect to contribute a further £55 million through EC aid programmes in the next five years.

35. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the existing bilateral treaties between the United Kingdom and the United States of America. [90492]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There are currently over 500 bilateral treaties with the United States, covering a wide range of subjects. One of the earliest is entitled, "Provisional Articles of Peace with the United States of America", which was signed in Paris on 30 November 1782. The most recent treaty is the "Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland on behalf of the Turks and Caicos Islands and the Government of the United States of America relating to investment incentives", which was signed in Washington on 20 April 1999. Bilateral treaties cover a diverse range of subjects including the final suppression of the African slave trade, visas, the carriage of ammunition, the use of military facilities on Ascension Island and drug trafficking.

Mr. Hoon: I have no immediate plans to meet with either the Government of Morocco or the Polisario. However, FCO officials regularly meet with both sides to discuss the way forward in the Western Sahara.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government intend to take to secure the implementation of the UN Peace Plan for a Referendum in Western Sahara. [90437]

Mr. Hoon: We fully support the UN's efforts to hold a referendum in the Western Sahara. We keep pressure on both parties to adhere to the UN Secretary-General's deadlines both bilaterally and at the UN.

Departmental Services

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he has made for the provision of (i) IT support, (ii) stationery and (iii) hospitality services for his Department; and what percentage of each is contracted from outside bodies. [90569]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 13 July 1999]: FCO provision for IT support, stationery and hospitality for the Financial Year 1999–2000 is as follows:

Stationery

£1.7 million. All stationery budgets at home and overseas are devolved. A centrally negotiated call-off contract is used. All stationery is contracted out.

Hospitality[1]

£2.286 million. All catering services are contracted out though wine and equipment are provided from the Government Hospitality cellar. All overseas Hospitality Budgets are devolved to Posts. No figures are held centrally.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in freezing the assets of members of the Milosevic regime; and if he will make a statement. [91240]

The Bank of England issued a notice to banks and other institutions on 22 June giving details of the Regulation. Corresponding UK Regulations came into force on 25 June. All accounts identified as belonging to individuals and companies covered by the Regulation have been blocked.

In addition, the Government have acted upon a request from the International Criminal Tribunal on the Former Yugoslavia to freeze the assets of Milosevic and four associates in respect of whom warrants and orders of arrest were issued on 24 May.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) associated bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (1) fuel types and (2) engine cubic capacities; how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (A) his Department and (B) associated bodies listed in the National Asset Register will be replaced in (x) 1999–2000, (y) 2000–1 and (z) 2001–2 by vehicles using (a1) petrol, (b2) diesel, (c3) natural gas, (d4) electric batteries and (e5) other; and how much his Department plans to spend in each year on vehicle replacements. [90691]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 19 July 1999]: 1. The FCO and associated bodies have the following owned and leased vehicles; details of the fuel type and engine capacity are included where they are known.

2. The FCO has 1,288 vehicles overseas, of which 29 are leased.

3. 543 vehicles use petrol and 362 use diesel; the remainder are unknown as more detailed information about vehicles purchased by FCO Posts overseas is not available. In each case, the type of fuel chosen will depend on the type of vehicle required and the availability of fuel types in each country at the time of purchase. Specific details of engine cubic capacity are not known in full, but is on average 2.5 or 3.5 litres.

4. Planning for the replacement of vehicles has now been devolved to Commands. It is disproportionate in the time available to produce the information for the purchase of vehicles for overseas Missions.

5. The FCO's home fleet has 45 vehicles in total, of which 32 are diesel, the remainder is petrol. The replacement programme for the next three years is as follows: 1999–2000, four vehicles; 2000–01 and 2000–02 will be dependent upon budgetary allocation.

Mr. Hoon: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met 12 ambassadors for British Business in July 1998. The aim was to review progress and consider how the scheme could be developed, to hear the views of the Business ambassadors on promoting Britain's image overseas and to underline that the scheme should be used to boost inward investment as well as British business overseas. There was no formal agenda. No briefing material or documentation was provided for the Business ambassadors for the meeting.

There is no requirement for the ambassadors for British Business to submit reports following their overseas engagements. The ambassadors for British Business are not involved in negotiating trade agreements.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he has had with visiting Ministers from the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement on relations with that country. [91829]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I met the then Foreign Minister for the Democratic Republic of the Congo in December 1998, and this year have met the Ministers of Finance and Human Rights during their visits to Britain. I visited Kinshasa in February 1999 and met President Kabila and other Ministers. We enjoy normal diplomatic relations with the DRC. Britain welcomes the signature of a ceasefire agreement in Lusaka on 10 July by the DRC and other countries concerned. We stand ready with the rest of the international community to help consolidate the peace.

Michael Ashcroft

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Mr. Michael Ashcroft has used a diplomatic passport for entry to the United Kingdom and enjoyed diplomatic immunity within the UK in the last five years (a) when declaring himself to be an Ambassador on entry and (b) when entering not having so declared himself. [92070]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Records are not normally kept of visits to the UK by diplomatic passport holders and we have none of Mr. Ashcroft having entered the UK using a diplomatic passport. Nor do we have any record of Mr. Ashcroft having sought immunity at any time over the last five years.

Diplomatic Passports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what rules govern the use of overseas accredited diplomatic passports by UK nationals. [92071]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The rules governing the use of foreign diplomatic passports by UK or other nationals is a matter for the overseas issuing authority.

British diplomatic passports are issued only to officers (and their spouses) serving overseas as accredited diplomats. They should be used only for journeys into and out of countries to which holders have been accredited.

Holocaust Remembrance Day

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement in the proposed Government committee on Holocaust Remembrance Day. [92159]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 400.

Iraq

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what forms of telecommunications in Iraq will be permitted to be restructured under the extension of the oil-for-food programme. [92157]

Mr. Hoon: It is for the Government of Iraq to propose projects and equipment in the telecommunications sector as in all sectors for funding under the oil-for-food programme. The UN Secretary General approved Iraq's distribution plan for the sixth phase of the programme in April, subject to the caveat that each application will require the approval of the Iraq sanctions committee. We would be prepared to consider applications for telecommunications equipment directly related to the humanitarian programme.

Chinese Embassy, Belgrade

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the stance of the United Kingdom delegation to the UN Security Council on 14 June, with reference to the debate over the Chinese Embassy bombing in Belgrade; and what was the United Kingdom vote on the relevant resolutions. [92156]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We understand Chinese anger and grief at NATO's accidental bombing of the Chinese Embassy in Belgrade. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary have both made clear to the Chinese Government our deep regret at this tragic event. These sentiments were underlined in the Presidential Statement of the UN Security Council, issued on 14 May. There have been no Security Council resolutions on the issue.

International Criminal Court

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which have ratified the Rome Agreement to set up the International Criminal Court, indicating in each case the date of ratification. [92162]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Three countries have to date ratified the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court: Senegal (on 2 February 1999); Trinidad and Tobago (on 6 April 1999); and San Marino (on 13 May 1999).

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the legislation for British ratification of the International Criminal Court will be published. [92161]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Legislation to enable the UK to ratify the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court will be introduced as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

British Council

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 July 1999, Official Report, column 55, what projection he has made of the estimated loss of revenue over the next three years as a result of the withdrawal of DFID contracts from the British Council. [92164]

Mr. Hoon: The British Council estimates that the value of DFID contracts it will implement will decline from £56.7 million in 1998–99 to £25.8 million in 2001–02, a fall of £30.9 million. The revenue will decrease form £11.0 million to £4.9 million, a reduction of £6.1 million.

In addition, based on trends in the decline of the number of trainees, the value of the Technical Co-operation Contract will decrease from £19.4 million in 1998–99 to £6.8 million. The revenue will decrease from £3.7 million to £1.3 million, a drop of £2.4 million.

In total revenue will decrease from £14.7 million in 1998–99 to £6.2 million, a drop of £8.5 million.

Human Rights

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he is taking to protect the citizens of countries whose security services are guilty of crimes against them. [90799]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Various international human rights instruments, most notably the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Convention against Torture, contain provisions designed to protect individuals from abuse by public authorities, including security services. We consistently urge all Governments to ratify and implement these instruments. More generally, we are able to provide practical assistance to strengthen understanding of and respect for human rights among public officials.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92178]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

War Crimes Tribunals

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total cost to date of the tribunals on (a) Rwanda and (b) the former Yugoslavia. [92163]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The International Criminal Tribunals for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia are mainly funded by assessed contributions from member states of the United Nations. The cost to date of assessed contributions is as follows:

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda

Year	$ million

Director of Public Prosecutions (Annual Report)

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Attorney-General when the Director of Public Prosecutions intends to publish his Annual Report. [92528]

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has today published his Annual Report and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

BBC (Funding)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Ms Ryan) of 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 131–32, on the review of future funding of the BBC, when he will publish the findings of the review panel. [92693]

Mr. Chris Smith: I expect to receive the panel's report at the end of July and will publish it as soon as possible thereafter. Copies will be sent to hon. Members in their constituencies and placed in the Libraries of the House.

Publication of the report will mark the start of a period of public consultation which will run until 1 November 1999. I will reflect on the evidence gathered during that consultation with a view to taking decisions on the recommendations by the end of the year.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Rail Travel

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to encourage and promote rail travel. [90372]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Promotion of the use of the rail network will be one of the main objectives of the Strategic Rail Authority, to be established by the Railways Bill which received its second reading on 19 July. Meanwhile the shadow Strategic Rail Authority has been in operation since 1 April and is making a head start on the strategic planning which the industry needs. We have made three key rail appointments, which look to the future of railway industry.

February's National Rail Summit produced commitments from the industry to deliver year on year improvements in terms of new drivers, new trains and better performance.

In addition we have established two new funds, the Infrastructure Investment Fund and the Rail Passenger Partnership scheme as well as providing extra funds for the freight facilities grant.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to allow motorcycle couriers to use bus lanes in London. [91488]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We currently have no plans to allow motorcycle couriers to use bus lanes in London. Two pilot projects have been conducted in Bristol and Reading on the use of bus lanes by powered two wheelers. These were a useful source of information about the traffic and safety effects on powered two wheelers. But there was no monitoring of the situation before implementation and there are unanswered questions about their impact on pedal cyclists and the abuse of bus lanes by other drivers. We would, therefore, welcome proposals from local authorities interested in conducting properly monitored pilot studies of the use of bus lanes by motorcycles to help inform decisions on whether there is a case for motorcyclists to be allowed to use bus lanes.

A1 (Upgrading)

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the properties purchased alongside the A1 road between Scotch Corner and Rainton in Yorkshire to allow for the upgrading of the road to motorway standards and (b) the total cost of the properties; what plans he has for these properties; and what is the future of the upgrading scheme. [90792]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 14 July 1999]: The Highways Agency has bought and sold the following 26 properties and pieces of land:

Property/land	Bought	Sold
Street House	21 July 1992	22 December 1997
The Georgian House	28 January 1993	25 November 1998
Roxby House	1 February 1994	22 January 1999
Leases Farm	12 May 1994	26 February 1999
Hopetown Farm Buildings	28 July 1994	22 January 1999
Hopetown House	6 July 1996	31 October 1996
Thoroughway House	31 October 1994	14 November 1997
Leases Grange	27 November 1995	18 November 1998
The Croft	11 July 1996	29 March 1999
New Inn Farm	31 December 1996	28 May 1998
Land at Little Holtby	6 June 1996	1 June 1998
The Shawgills	26 August 1993	20 March 1998

Property/land	Bought	Sold
Land at Station Road	29 January 1993	20 May 1999
The Little Bistro	3 June 1994	23 March 1999
St. Annes Cross	25 January 1995	29 May 1998
Scurragh House	24 August 1995	27 March 1998
Gatherley Villa	14 November 1995	27 March 1998
South Lodge	15 June 1992	27 March 1998
Firholme Farm	18 November 1998	retained
Lodge Farm	11 October 1995	not yet sold (but offer accepted)
Leases Hall	24 August 1994	not yet sold (but offer accepted)
Leases Tip	23 August 1994	for sale
Bedale Hunt Inn	28 August 1992	for sale
Brookside	24 September 1992	retained in part (sale of remainder being negotiated)
Land South of Station Road	30 March 1999	retained
Land at Catterick South Junction	1 September 1989	retained

This is at a total cost of some £5 million in connection with earlier proposals for improvements along the A1 between Dishforth and Scotch Corner.

The improvement schemes were withdrawn from the Trunk Road Programme in 1996. Other than properties directly affected by the extant Orders for the Leeming to Scotch Corner scheme, the Highways Agency is selling the land and properties which it was required to buy under blight provisions for the schemes.

Buses

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list annual bus ridership figures from 1992 to 1998 in (a) Greater London, (b) Tyne and Wear, (c) Merseyside, (d) Greater Manchester, (e) South Yorkshire, (f) West Yorkshire, (g) West Midlands and (h) the rest of England. [91406]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Across England as a whole bus patronage rose by one per cent. over the year 1996–97 to 1997–98. Bus ridership, measured as bus passenger journeys, is shown in the table. Data appear in tables 10 and 16 of the Transport Statistics Report "Focus on Public Transport Great Britain: 1999 edition", published by The Stationery Office. Data for 1998–99 will not be available until later this year.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the cost of installing the planned 360 on-bus cameras for the enforcement of bus lanes in London. [91487]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The London-wide expansion of the Traffic Director/Metropolitan Police to use cameras to enforce bus lanes was announced last year. Every bus lane in London will be covered by March 2003. The scheme is estimated to cost £10 million. This includes around 325 on-bus and 35 portable roadside cameras and associated common costs such as signing, computer hardware and software (including development) and type approvals.

Wembley

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what capital sums English Partnerships has allocated to the Wembley Task Force in 1999. [91703]

Mr. Raynsford: None. Should the proposed Task Force identify any projects where support for physical regeneration may be required then it is for English Partnerships to consider each project proposal on its merits, against London-wide priorities, and in light of the resources available to the Agency. The Task Force will be seeking to maximise private sector investment in to the area on the back of the significant investment already made by the public sector.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Wembley Stadium Development Monitoring Committee has to consult and involve (a) Brent Council and (b) local stakeholders. [91704]

Mr. Raynsford: The Wembley Monitoring Committee is there to ensure effective co-ordination across Government and their agencies in respect of the national stadium project, to consider issues arising and agree handling. As the local planning authority, it is not appropriate for Brent to be part of that Committee. We are, however, maintaining close contact with Brent and my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Culture Media and Sport and the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning (Mr. Caborn), met the Leader of Brent Council last week. The local community will, of course, be consulted as part of the planning process.

London Underground

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what responsibility the Minister for Transport takes for operational performance of London Underground Ltd. [91484]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 July 1999]: The responsibilities of the Secretary of State and his Ministers for the operational performance of London Underground Ltd. are laid out in the London Regional Transport Act 1984, as amended.

Departmental Travel

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to reduce the use of official cars by officials in (a) his Department, (b) executive agencies of his Department, (c) his Department's-sponsored non-departmental public bodies, including regional development agencies and (d) the Government Offices for the Regions. [91452]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 15 July 1999]: Green Transport Plans covering our Headquarters buildings, Executive Agencies and Government Offices aim to reduce the environmental impact of the journey to work and travel on official business.

In addition, our travel and subsistence rules have been revised, with now only a single mileage rate to encourage the use of public transport rather than rates based on car engine size. Claims also have to verify that the most cost effective means of transport was used and the use of a car is considered only where public transport was not a viable option.

Further Green Transport Plans will be in place, in line with the Government target, for all other key Departmental buildings, i.e. those where it is the major occupier and has over 50 staff, by March 2000.

Fuel Storage Tanks

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to require the owners and operators of fuel storage tanks (a) to ensure that drain cocks on such tanks are fitted with a lockable device to prevent accidental spillage and (b) to ensure that operating procedures are in place to ensure that such devices are used. [91777]

Mr. Meale: The Environment Agency's Pollution Prevention Guidelines (PPG2) on above ground oil storage tanks recommends that all tanks should have valves or cocks with lockable or removable hand wheels to prevent accidental spillage. The Guidelines (PPG11) also state that a routine programme of inspection and maintenance should be established.

The Government are considering whether further measures to prevent water pollution from industrial, commercial and institutional (residential and non-residential) oil storage installations are needed. We expect to make an announcement shortly.

Countryside Agency

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money his Department has provided to the Countryside Agency for the development of quiet lanes. [91800]

Mr. Meale: The Countryside Agency has allocated £253,000 of its grant in aid for this financial year to the Quiet Roads initiative. This will bring the total spent on the initiative since it was launched by the Countryside Commission two years ago to £450,000.

Water Companies

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the programme of work which water companies are being requested to carry out on the environment during the period 2000 to 2005 following the recent adjustment to the cost of capital made by the Director General of Water Services for the 1999 periodic review. [91798]

Mr. Meale: The Government's guidance to the Director General on the environmental and water quality improvements to be delivered by 2005 was published under the title "Raising the Quality" in September 1998. More detailed proposals for individual company programmes were announced on 1 March 1999.

These programmes and the cost of capital will both be factors which the Director General takes into account in the draft price determinations he plans to announce on 27 July.

Affordable Homes

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many affordable homes to rent were developed in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998 in (i) Salisbury district, (ii) North Dorset district, (iii) New Forest district, (iv) Kennet district and (v) Test Valley district. [91794]

Mr. Raynsford: The additional rented social lettings provided in these districts in 1997–98 and 1998–99 by registered social landlords, with support from the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme (ADP) and Local Authority Social Housing Grant (LASHG), were as follows:

District	1997–98	1998–99
Salisbury	121	95
North Dorset	93	51
New Forest	124	148
Kennet	218	138
Test Valley	57	68

These additional social lettings come from new build, the purchase and rehabilitation of existing property and from empty properties brought into use for temporary social housing. The ADP and LASHG also support the provision of homes for shared ownership and incentive schemes which assist social tenants to move into home ownership and vacate their lettings for others in housing need.

According to information provided to the Department by local authorities, there was no new building of council housing in these districts in 1997–98 and 1998–99 (other than that provided by LASHG).

Local Government Act 1988

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people have been prosecuted in each year since 1988 under section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988. [91868]

Mr. Meale: No local authority to date has been taken to court for breach of section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988. I should clarify that the restrictions in the section apply to the actions of local authorities, not individual people.

Waste Strategy, London

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has commissioned on a waste strategy for London; what were the results of that research which has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [91781]

Mr. Meale: My Department has not commissioned any such research.

Driving Tests

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the waiting time for a practical car driving test in Carlisle; and if he will make a statement; [91442]

(2) what is the target waiting time for a practical car driving test set by the Driving Standards Agency. [91443]

Ms Glenda Jackson: [holding answer 19 July 1999]: The current waiting time for driving tests is nine weeks in Carlisle. The Driving Standards Agency has brought in two extra examiners to help reduce the waiting time locally.

The Agency's service targets for test delivery are that the national average waiting time will not exceed six weeks, and that appointments will be available within 10 weeks at 99 per cent. of permanent driving test centres.

Central Railways

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what meetings have taken place between Special Advisers in his Department and representatives of or advisers to Central Railways. [91989]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 20 July 1999]: None.

North West Development Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which persons acted as independent assessors in the sift and interview of candidates for appointment to the Board of the North West Development Agency. [91473]

Mr. Meale: Dr. Joan Firth acted as independent assessor in the sift and interviews of candidates for appointment to the Board of the North West Development Agency.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what potential conflicts of interest were taken into account when appointments were made to the Board of the North West Development Agency. [91474]

Mr. Meale: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions asked all candidates for appointment to complete a questionnaire, giving details of any companies or partnerships of which they were or had been a director or partner during the past 10 years. Candidates were specifically asked to declare any facts that they felt might be raised in public in the future in relation to their suitability to hold the appointment, particularly anything that could be presented as a conflict of interest.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the names of individuals and other bodies who nominated persons to the Board of North West Regional Development Agency; [91470]

(2) in what journals a general advertisement was placed seeking nominations to the Board of North West Regional Development Agency [91469]

Mr. Meale: Nominations were invited from regional stakeholders. I list here the names of those individuals and bodies who nominated people. A press release was issued to the regional press saying that Regional stakeholders had been invited to make nominations. In addition an advertisement inviting applications for board membership of all DETR's NDPBs was placed in The Sunday Times, The Guardian and the Journal (ethnic press).

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will instruct the North West Development Agency to carry out an internal inquiry into the change in the costs of mileage allowances arising out of the transfer of English Partnership offices from Cockermouth to Penrith. [91464]

Mr. Meale: No. This is an operational matter for the North West Development Agency.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the location is of the office in his Department which held the data relating to nominations to the Board of the North West Development Agency. [91471]

Mr. Meale: The data relating to nominations to the Board of the North West Development Agency are held by the Government Office for the North West, located in Sunley Tower, Piccadilly Plaza, Manchester.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate has been made of the freehold value of English Partnerships' offices in Cockermouth on the basis of English Partnerships remaining as a tenant. [91472]

Mr. Meale: Issues relating to accommodation are a matter for the North West Development Agency. The English Partnerships office at Cockermouth transferred to the Agency on 1 April 1999. I understand that the portfolio of premises, including the offices at Lakeland Business Park, is valued annually by independent valuers. The most recent valuation took place on 31 March and reflected the occupation of the premises by Agency staff. For commercial reasons the precise detail of the annual valuation is confidential.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which organisation will receive the moneys raised from the sale of English Partnerships' offices at Home Wood in Cockermouth. [91457]

Mr. Meale: I understand that Home Wood is now known as Lakeland Business Park. It was transferred from English Partnerships to the North West Development Agency (NWDA) on 1 April 1999. The estate at Lakeland Business Park consists of a number of office blocks, one of which is occupied by NWDA staff. The premises at Lakeland Business Park are owned by the NWDA and any proceeds from the sale of those premises would come to the Agency subject to the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions' accounting regulations. The premises, however, are not currently programmed for disposal.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 447, what estimate has been made of the letting value of the English Partnerships offices in Cockermouth. [91458]

Mr. Meale: Issues concerning accommodation are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand from the Agency that the current rental estimate for the premises at Cockermouth is £4.50 per square foot.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if all offices to be occupied by the North West Development Agency have or are to have BREAM ratings. [91459]

Mr. Meale: Issues relating to accommodation are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand that it is the Agency's policy to ensure that all new offices will obtain a BREAM rating.

The Agency is currently either occupying premises which it has inherited or occupying existing premises on a temporary basis. The premises at Mercury Court in Liverpool, Lakeland Business Park in Cumbria, New Town Hall in Warrington and Mulfield House in Birchwood, Warrington, do not have a BREAM rating.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the annual (a) office-related costs and (b) total of salaries and estate-related costs for the English Partnerships offices in Cockermouth for each of the last two years. [91460]

Mr. Meale: The annual figures for English Partnerships Cockermouth were as follows:

Salaries	357,000	322,000
Other office related	157,000	170,000
Estate related	353,000	343,000

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish an independent inquiry into the change in the costs of mileage allowances arising from the transfer of English Partnerships' offices from Cockermouth to Penrith. [91463]

Mr. Meale: No. This is an operational matter for the North West Development Agency.

Aarhus Convention

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the changes to procedures adopted by his Department and its agencies following the Government's signing of the Aarhus Convention on Access to Environmental Information; [91817]

(2) what plans he has to ratify the Aarhus Convention on Access to Environmental Information; and if he will make a statement. [91816]

Mr. Meale: We intend to ratify the UNECE Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-Making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters (the 'Aarhus Convention') as soon as we have all the necessary measures in place to implement its provisions.

Like most of the other European Union member states, the UK expects to be in a position to ratify by the end of 2000. To date, only the Republic of Moldova has ratified.

Implementation of the Convention is through a mixture of administrative actions and legislative measures. In a great many respects, the UK already fulfils the provisions of the Convention. However, new legislation will be required to implement some of the provisions on environmental information and the consultation paper on the draft Freedom of Information Bill stated that current environmental information regime would be revoked and replaced with provisions in the Bill.

In the past year, we have continued to promote activities relevant to the Convention. For example, the Environment Agency issued a consultation paper on its proposals for extended public consultation on selected licence applications on 16 July, draft Planning Policy Guidance Note 12 on Development Plans promotes active public participation in the preparation of a development plan and the Environment Agency has published a new Pollution Inventory on the internet.

Non-UK Driving Licences

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of people who have been driving regularly in the United Kingdom with non-UK driving licences in each of the last five years. [92023]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not collected.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many and what proportion of road accidents have involved people driving with non-UK driving licences in each of the last five years. [92022]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No information is collected nationally on the country of issue of licences held by drivers involved in road accidents.

Rail Use (London)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of passengers using rail transport (a) to commute into London and (b) to travel around London in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 and (iv) 1998–99. [92398]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The estimated number of people from 1995 onwards entering central London by rail during the morning peak period between 7 am and 10 am on an average weekday is as follows:

Thousand

	Surface rail[1]	LUL and DLR only
1995	395	348
1996	399	361
1997	435	373
1998	447	395

[1] Includes transfers to LUL and DLR

The estimated numbers of annual passenger journeys by rail in London from 1995–96 onwards are as follows:

Million

	Surface rail[1]	LUL	DLR
1995–96	761	784	15
1996–97	800	772	17
1997–98	846	832	21
1998–99	892	866	29

[1] Surface rail data covering the London area are not available—these figures refer to passenger journeys in the former Network South East area.

Development Agencies

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance has been provided to members of development agencies as to circumstances in which conflict of interest might exist and the action which should be taken when such guidance is ignored. [91465]

Mr. Meale: The letters of appointment sent to members of the North West Development Agency provided guidance on potential conflicts of interest and the responsibility to declare any such interests.

The Codes of Conduct, which have been drawn up by the agencies in accordance with guidance produced by the Cabinet Office, cover the issue of members' interests. Agencies are required to maintain a Register of Interest of their members. Board members have attended a training course on their roles and responsibilities as members of non-departmental public bodies. The issues of conflicts of interest and propriety were among the issues covered.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Bosnia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the level of misuse of international aid sent to Bosnia; and if she will make a statement. [91719]

Mr. Foulkes: We have made no assessment of the level of misuse of international aid to Bosnia, although we monitor the general effectiveness of international development programmes to which we contribute. We have no evidence to suggest that international aid is being misused in Bosnia.

Somalia

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what steps her Department has taken to promote the inclusion of Somalia within the ACP group of countries for development purposes; [91928]

(2) what steps her Department has taken to raise the issue of Somalia with the European Union and ACP group of states in negotiations on the successor to the Lomé Convention. [91927]

Mr. Foulkes: Somalia is an ACP member. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 14 July 1999, Official Report, column 224.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91896]

Mr. Foulkes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to the hon. Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

Two New Deal appointees are expected to join the Department by the end of July. We also expect to submit approximately six further vacancies to the Employment Service in the remainder of 1999 with a continuing annual programme of 10 to 12 New Deal appointments thereafter.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many appointments to quangos she made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92140]

Mr. Foulkes: Between 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made 41 appointments to quangos. Six of the appointees were members of Britain's ethnic minority communities, of whom five were from the Asian community.

The number of appointments made for the period 1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999 was 15, of which none were from the ethnic minority communities.

We are committed to achieving by the end of 2002 a target of 10 per cent. of the public appointments for which we are responsible to be held by members of the ethnic minority communities.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) her, (b) other Ministers in her Department, (c) special advisers in her Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in her Department. [92177]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report columns 5–7.

Kosovo

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development by what criteria the Government will decide what proportion of the costs incurred by her Department during the Kosovo crisis between and including March and July will be met from Treasury Contingency Reserve and what proportion from her Department's budget; and if she will make a statement. [92230]

Mr. Foulkes: The Government have already decided that £30 million of the £56 million cost incurred by DFID on the Kosovo crisis between and including March and July should come from the Reserve.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by her Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [92003]

Mr. Foulkes: Gender impact is routinely assessed in each Evaluation Study commissioned by DFID's Evaluation Department. These studies are put out in draft for comment among persons associated with the project or programme under evaluation, and are routinely published in hard copy and on DFID's Internet Website. A global evaluation of DFID's work in promoting gender equality will be commissioned later this year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Offences (Sentences)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a consolidated list of criminal offences together with the minimum and maximum lengths of sentences which attach to each type of offence. [91668]

Mr. Boateng: No consolidated list of criminal offences currently exists and to produce one would be an expensive and time-consuming exercise with limited benefits. I therefore have no plans to do so.

Cyclists

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the enforcement of the law in relation to pedal cyclists who ride (a) through red lights and (b) on pavements. [91562]

Kate Hoey: Enforcement of the law in respect of cycling offences is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police. The hazards caused by cyclists who ride through red lights and who cycle inconsiderately on the pavement are recognised by chief officers and appropriate action is taken where such offences are detected. In order to assist the police, we are introducing, from 1 August, a fixed penalty for the offence of cycling on the pavement. Chief officers recognise that the fixed penalty will need to be used with a considerable degree of discretion and it cannot be issued to anyone under the age of 16. But it will provide the police service with a direct and simple means of dealing with inconsiderate cycling.

Sexual Harassment (Prison Service)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many allegations of sexual harassment have been made by female employees in Her Majesty's Prison Service in each of the last five years for which records are available. [91553]

Mr. George Howarth: Records have only been compiled centrally since 1998. These consist of cases notified to Prison Service headquarters by equal opportunities officers. The recorded information is given in the table:

Year	Number of allegations
January–December 1998	31
January–June 1999	5

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of sexual harassment in Her Majesty's Prison Service have been settled by employment tribunals in each of the last five years for which records are available. [91551]

Mr. George Howarth: The table provides information about all cases, including sexual harassment, brought under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 which were settled either by negotiation or by Tribunal decision.

Year	Industrial/employment tribunals
1995	3
1996	5
1997	5
1999	0

Home Office Headquarters

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) objectives and (b) progress of the planned re-location of Home Office headquarters from Queen Anne's Gate. [92195]

Mr. Straw: The objectives of the Home Office Central London Accommodation Strategy Private Finance Initiative project are to provide accommodation which meets Home Office and Prison Service long-term requirements for headquarters accommodation in central London; meets operational and business requirements; supports the Home Office modernisation programme; provides a healthy, safe and secure working environment for staff; and complies with Home Office and wider Government environmental policies.

An invitation to submit best and final offers was issued to three bidders in August 1998. Their bids were received in November 1998. None of these bids were acceptable and it is now proposed to invite further best and final offers based upon a revised statement of requirements. Bidders have been told that we expect to do this in September. The new accommodation is likely to be ready for occupation no earlier than 2004.

Prior Convictions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances police may make public a defendant's prior convictions in cases where anonymity has been granted in a criminal trial. [92109]

Mr. George Howarth: The rules of evidence governing the admissibility in criminal proceedings of a defendant's criminal record apply regardless of whether anonymity has been granted in those proceedings.

The law on previous misconduct is currently under consideration by the Law Commission. The Law Commission issued a consultation paper on this subject in July 1996 and their final report is expected early next year.

European Year Against Racism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the membership of the National Co-ordination Committee for the 1997 European Year Against Racism; what reports he has received on the Committee's work; and if he will place copies in the Library. [91536]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Permanent members of the National Co-ordination Committee for the 1997 European Year Against Racism are:

Copies of the report and a covering Explanatory Memorandum are available in the Library.

Community Relations Unit

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the principal functions of the Community Relations Unit and set out its priorities for 1999 and 2000. [91535]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The aims of the Race Equality Unit (formerly the Community Relations Unit) for 1999–2000 are to promote race equality and to increase ethnic minority representation in the public sector. This includes:

developing, implementing and monitoring race equality employment targets for the Home Office Services; launching a new grant scheme to promote race equality; contributing to and, where appropriate, giving a lead on race equality issues internationally; developing policy on religious discrimination and other faith issues; support for the Home Secretary's Race Relations Forum which provides ethnic minorities with an effective voice at the heart of government; reviewing the effectiveness of the criminal law in race relations; and supporting the reception of refugees including the Kosovan Humanitarian Evacuation Programme.

Albania

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) British passports and (b) visitor's permits have been issued to (i) male and (ii) female Albanians in each of the last two years; what estimate he has made of the number of Albanians who are in this country illegally; and if he will make a statement. [92217]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is on grants of British citizenship and the issue of non-settlement entry clearance at the British Embassies in Tirana, or in Rome and Istanbul which were the designated entry clearance issuing posts for applicants resident in Albania before the British Embassy in Tirana provided full entry clearance-issuing facilities in 1999. The data are given in the table. No information is readily available on the gender of the applicants.

There is no estimate of the total number of Albanian nationals currently living in the United Kingdom who have no lawful right to be here.

Year of grant	1997	1998
Albanian nationals granted British citizenship	3	9
Albanian nationals granted non-settlement entry clearance issued at the British Embassies in Tirana, Rome and Istanbul	639	1,240

All issues, not necessarily to Albanian nationals

Animal Experiments

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference given to the inquiry into procedures at Harlan UK's breeding establishment in North West Leicestershire; how many inspectors are engaged in the inquiry; and what is its planned timescale. [91814]

Mr. George Howarth: I have asked the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate to investigate all the allegations made against this establishment by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection (BUAV) in so far as they relate to possible contraventions of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; the terms and conditions of licences and certificates issues under the 1986 Act; and the Codes of Practice issued under section 21(2) of the Act. I have asked that, should any other indications of possible contraventions be uncovered during the course of the investigation, these be investigated too. The investigation is not restricted to any particular part of the establishment or to the material contained in the BUAV's report or compilation video tape recording.

One Superintending Inspector is heading the investigation. He is being assisted, as necessary, by other members of the Inspectorate and by other civil servants in the Animal Procedures Section at the Home Office.

I have not set a time limit on the investigation. We are still waiting to receive from the BUAV the evidence that they collected, and the amount of time needed will depend on what this material shows and the other findings that emerge from the investigation. I expect, however, that it could take two to three months to complete. I will receive reports at appropriate points during the investigation and any immediate action needed to protect animal welfare will be taken.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times Ministers in her Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials at each meeting. [90410]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have met Irish Ministers very frequently throughout the Talks Process. Other meetings held by Northern Ireland Office Ministers since 1 January 1999 were:

RUC

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to publish the 1998-99 report on the Royal Ulster Constabulary by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary. [92526]

Mr. Ingram: Copies of the 1998-99 Inspection Report, which is the fourteenth RUC Inspection Report to be published, have today been placed in the Library.

Her Majesty's Inspector's overall remit is to examine police operational efficiency and effectiveness and offer his independent and professional recommendations. I am sure the Independent Commission on Policing will be interested to note the recommendations and I am extremely pleased to see that Her Majesty's Inspector is optimistic about the future of policing in Northern Ireland, as indeed I am myself.

This report covers a number of areas relating to matters such as RUC planning strategies, consultation arrangements, performance management, and community relations. The Chief Constable will now consider these issues and in due course the Police Authority will publish any comments either the Chief Constable or the Authority may have.

Construction Service

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Construction Service in 1999–2000. [92527]

Marjorie Mowlam: For 1999–2000, the following performance targets have been set for Construction Services:

Quality of Service

1. To achieve a 90 per cent. compliance in customer assessments of Agency performance against Service Level Agreements.
2. To obtain a 90 per cent. positive response in customer assessments on project work.
3. To place 80 per cent. of orders in response to requests for reactive maintenance work within 7 days.
4. To place 75 per cent. of orders in response to requests for supplies work within 7 days.
5. To respond to 85 per cent. of customer advisory inquiries within 6 weeks.

Efficiency

6. To achieve 3 per cent. efficiency gains on running cost expenditure.
7. To ensure that actual costs as a percentage of agreed target costs on project work do not exceed the agreed percentage.
8. To ensure that staff costs as a percentage of construction spend for maintenance work do not exceed the agreed percentage.
9. To ensure that staff costs as a percentage of construction spend for supplies work do not exceed the agreed percentage.

Financial Performance

10. To maintain expenditure within cash limits and to approved budgetary plans.
11. To recover the full cost of Agency Operations from customers with a tolerance of ±2 per cent.

CCTV

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish the guidelines, procedures and rules governing the town centre CCTV challenge competition; what criteria will be used to make financial allocations; and if the scheme is subject to policy appraisal fair treatment guidelines. [91531]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Police Authority for Northern Ireland issued a detailed guidance document on the bidding process when the first Northern Ireland Town Centre CCTV Challenge Competition was launched on 24 June 1999. This document sets out the procedures for submitting a bid and details the criteria against which all bids will be assessed. The guidance document has been widely circulated to interested parties across Northern Ireland and further copies may be obtained by contacting the Authority. As demonstrated by the announcement in March last year of the new Targeting Social Need initiative, the Government remain committed to securing equality of opportunity and equity of treatment for all the people of Northern Ireland. The rules of this competition have been developed in line with this policy and the awarding of funds will also be so governed.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures she has taken to ensure that victims of sectarian crimes of violence and their relatives are consulted and encouraged to become involved in local partnerships receiving funding through town centre CCTV challenge competitions. [91530]

Mr. Ingram: Details of the Northern Ireland Town Centre CCTV Challenge Competition have been widely disseminated throughout Northern Ireland by way of both television coverage and local press articles. All members of the community have been equally encouraged to participate in the establishing of local partnerships which will clearly benefit from being as inclusive as possible. Membership of the partnerships is open to anyone with an interest to contributing to the crime reduction effort in their local area.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what rules govern the use of recordings made as a result of town centre CCTV cameras; and what safeguards are available to protect against (a) the unauthorised use of a recording and (b) the abuse of an authorised use. [91533]

Mr. Ingram: Any CCTV scheme funded as a result of a bid in the Northern Ireland Town Centre CCTV Challenge Competition must be governed by a Code of Practice. The development of such a Code is a critical element of the bidding procedure and is required to take account of generally recognised standards and safeguards relating to the use of CCTV.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will require the Police Authority to make public police objections to partnerships seeking funding through the town centre CCTV challenge competition; at what level of command the decision to make an objection must be taken; and what body will assess in the first instance that an objection meets the requirement of reasonableness. [91532]

Mr. Ingram: Individual partnerships will receive a full report on any police objections to proposed town centre CCTV schemes. The decision to make an objection to a proposal should be taken at Superintendent level or higher. Partnerships unhappy with the police view of their proposal may wish to raise this matter with the Police Authority for Northern Ireland.

Sectarian Violence

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies her Department has commissioned on the age, gender and social and economic profile of the perpetrators of sectarian assaults. [91534]

Mr. Ingram: To date the Government have not commissioned studies on this issue.

SCOTLAND

Genetically Modified Fish

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the notifications under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992 (as amended) for work on genetically modified fish to be undertaken in Scotland. [88730]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 28 June 1999]: None. Activities involving genetically modified animals and plants need to be notified if they fail to meet criteria for safety to human health specified in the Regulations.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has assessed about biotechnology research involving (a) the transfer of fish genes into other organisms and (b) genes into fish. [89024]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 29 June 1999]: The only information assessed related to a premises notification submitted in 1994 under the Genetically Modified Organism (Contained Use) Regulations 1992 and related to work on transgenic fish undertaken at Otter Ferry Salmon Ltd., Argyll, with the assistance of a Canadian company. It was a pre-market pilot study and as such did not involve commercial release. This work has now ceased.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times ministers in his Department have held meetings with ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the ministers involved, and the names of the Irish ministers and officials at each meeting. [90403]

Dr. Reid: My hon. Friend the Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) held an ESDP bilateral in Dublin with Dan Wallace, Minister of State at the Irish Department of the Environment, on 12 March 1998. In accordance with convention the names of officials in attendance are not given.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish, through concordats or other appropriate documents, the administrative measures taken to clarify the arrangements within Government Departments on demarcation between matters dealt with by the Scottish Executive and those relating to Scotland continuing to be dealt with by the Scottish Office or other Whitehall Departments. [91236]

Dr. Reid: The devolution legislation defines the scope of the responsibilities of members of the Scottish Executive. The Scottish Ministers' responsibilities include functions in relation to matters in Scotland which are not reserved by schedule 5 of the Scotland Act 1998 and functions transferred to them under section 63 of that Act (e.g. under The Scotland Act 1998 (Transfer of Functions to the Scottish Ministers etc.) Order 1999, SI 1999 1750).

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact which the proposed climate change levy will have on the Scottish agricultural sector; and if he will make a statement. [91675]

Dr. Reid: The climate change levy will play a key role in helping the UK meet the greenhouse gas emission targets we are committed to achieve. It is a priority objective for the Government to mitigate the global impacts of climate change. My right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is responsible for this matter, will consider all submissions on the levy before he makes an announcement on its final form.

The National Farmers Union of Scotland has submitted its views on the levy to HM Customs and Excise. The National Farmers Union has joined representatives of other energy intensive sectors in negotiations for energy efficiency agreements with the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions. Sectors which make satisfactory agreements will be eligible for lower rates of levy. I understand that there has been good progress in the negotiations.

DEFENCE

Warships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Albion and HMS Bulwark will be in service; and if he will make a statement. [85960]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 8 June 1999]: The current approved ISDs are March 2002 and March 2003. However, the DPA has been informed that Marconi Naval Systems (MNS) (formerly VSEL) is experiencing difficulties with maintaining the LPD(R) construction programmes on schedule at their Barrow shipyard. I cannot confirm whether we will need to revise the in service dates until the company has completed their detailed negotiations with the DPA.

Eurofighter

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the percentage of the total value of the Eurofighter which is to be manufactured in the United Kingdom. [89928]

Mr. Spellar: Eurofighter workshare entitlements are based on the number of aircraft each of the four partner nations is purchasing. As the United Kingdom is purchasing 232 aircraft from a four nation total of 620, the percentage value of Eurofighter work accruing to the United Kingdom is 37.42 per cent. Any imbalances that arise between production activity levels and entitlements will be addressed during the life of the programme using mechanisms established in the Eurofighter Memoranda of Understanding signed by the four partner nations in December 1997.

TRIGAT Programme

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the medium-range TRIGAT programme. [90175]

Mr. Spellar: On 10 June the Secretary of State for Defence announced that the UK intended to join the Industrialisation and Production phase of the MR

TRIGAT programme. The UK, France and Germany have now signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) covering that stage of the programme. Subject to signature of the MOU by the remaining partner nations, Belgium and the Netherlands, and satisfactory final negotiations with the Prime Contractor, Aerospatiale, we expect to place a contract for the Industrialisation and Production of the weapon system later this year.

Project Budgets

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current budget of (a) the Active Decoy Round-Outfit DHL Project, (b) the Chinook Medium Support Helicopter Project, (c) the Counter Battery Radar Project, (d) the Joint Tactical Information Distribution System for Royal Navy Ships and Aircraft Project, (e) the Skynet 4 stage 2 Project, (f) the Truck Utility Light/Medium/Medium Project and (h) the Tomahawk Land Attack Missile Project; and in each case what was the original and what is the current in-service date. [90428]

Mr. Spellar: The information is as follows:

Project	Original predicted in service date	Current predicted or achieved in service date	Current estimated project cost at 1999-2000 prices (£ million)
Active Decoy Round-Outfit DLH	December 1997	April 2000	108

43 Brigade

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many redundancies there will be in Exeter following the removal of 43 Brigade to Bulford, Netheravon and Tidworth. [91566]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Our current estimate is that 27 people may be made redundant; this excludes members of the MOD Guard Service. The effect on MOD Guard Service personnel will depend on the future access control requirements at Wyvern Barracks, Exeter, which are yet to be finally determined.

British Forces Broadcasting Services

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make funding available to British Forces Broadcasting Services to enable the temporary radio station for the Colchester Garrison to be made a permanent service. [91793]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The 'garrison radio' service at Colchester is part of a trial facility over a 12 month period from April this year at the four largest UK mainland Army garrisons, as part of the Army's Corporate Communications Strategy. The facility uses a short-term (28 day) restricted service licence granted by the Radio Authority and each location (Bulford/Tidworth, Catterick, Colchester and Aldershot) will be covered twice during the trial period. A decision on the future of this service will be made following an assessment of the outcome of these trials and the availability of suitable frequency licences.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92182]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Biological and Chemical Weapons

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to announce the outcome of his Department's review of the defence response to the threat posed by biological and chemical weapons; and if he will make a statement. [92694]

Mr. George Robertson: I have today placed in the Library of the House a paper setting out the conclusions of our review. The paper entitled "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons", explains our policy and the ways in which we plan to develop our capabilities further.

We will continue to pursue, through international agreement, the verifiable elimination of biological and chemical weapons. Valuable progress has been made in recent years as a result of our efforts, but there is a long way to go before our objectives are met in full. In the meantime, we recognise that the use, or threatened use, of these weapons remains one of the potential challenges we must face.

I therefore place a high priority on ensuring that our Armed Forces are protected, with the training and equipment they need to deal with the risks such weapons continue to pose. We are enhancing our capabilities with a range of equipment programmes, for example by bringing into service additional Prototype Biological Detection Systems. We are also establishing the Joint Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (NBC) Regiment, and an NBC Defence Headquarters. As a result of our review, I have also set up a new Central Staffs Directorate in the Ministry of Defence to co-ordinate and take forward further work on NBC defence issues. They will maintain a rolling plan of action and report progress to me on a regular basis. In total we plan to spend over £270 million in this area over the next three years.

No potential adversary should believe that the use, or threatened use, of biological or chemical weapons would determine the outcome of a conflict or deter this government from taking action it believes is right.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999, and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92137]

Mr. Spellar: The following number of appointments were made to Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs) for which my Department is responsible:

(a) 1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998: 34; (i) nil; (ii) nil.

(b) 1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999: 30; (i) nil; (ii) nil.

These figures include new appointments as well as reappointments.

Appointments to the Armed Forces Pay Review Body are not included as they are made by the Prime Minister. Appointments to the technical Boards under the Defence Scientific Advisory Council are not included (they have previously been included in answers to similar questions). The Cabinet Office has recently agreed that as these Boards are sub-Committees of the Council they should not be classified as advisory NDPBs. Appointments to the Council itself are included.

Within the overriding principle of selection based on merit, MOD is committed to increasing diversity in appointments to its NDPBs and raising the representation of women, people from ethnic minority groups and disabled people in line with government-wide objectives. To this end MOD publishes an annual Plan for Public Appointments and Equal Opportunities (the plan for 1999–2002 was published in "Quangos: Opening up Public Appointments") which sets objectives and targets.

Defence Vetting Agency

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Vetting Agency in the financial year 1999–2000. [92695]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Vetting Agency was launched on 1 April 1997 with a staff of 349, at four separate Units in Central London, Portsmouth, Woolwich and Corsham. The Agency carries out some 130,000 vetting checks and investigations each year. The Agency is embarked on an ambitious modernisation programme aimed at creating a highly responsive and highly efficient, integrated organisation, exploiting the capabilities of modern information technology to the benefit of its customers. Central to the modernisation initiative is collocation of the Agency at York. 1999–2000 will see the run up to collocation. The Chief Executive has been set the following Key Targets:

Quality

Key Target 1

At least a 90 per cent. success rating in dealing with Contentious Cases, and zero Serious Errors.

Timeliness

Key Target 2

To complete 87 per cent. of Security Checks within 6 weeks (30 working days).

Key Target 3

To complete 84 per cent. of Counter Terrorist Checks within 6 weeks (30 working days).

Key Target 4

To complete 90 per cent. of all Developed Vetting clearances within 6 months (120 working days).

Key Target 5

To maintain average times for Security Checks and Counter Terrorist Checks of 4 weeks (20 working days) and 4.6 weeks (23 working days) respectively, and to complete Developed Vetting clearances on average within 3.1 months (62 working days).

Efficiency

Key Target 6

To maintain the Financial Year 1998–99 Unit Cost of Output.

I have arranged for advance copies of the Corporate Plan to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Data Series

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what new data series separated by gender, race, disability and age have been commissioned by his Department since June 1997. [90823]

Mr. Mudie: In January 1999 the Department carried out a re-survey of all its staff to update the information held on an individual's ethnic origin and disability information. The response rate by May 1999 was 94 per cent. of all staff.

Information on gender, age, ethnic origin and disability is automatically collected when a member of staff joins the Department. In addition individual members of staff have on-line access to their own computerised personnel file to enable them to notify the Department of any inaccuracies which may be held.

Laboratory Teaching

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations he has had with industry on the financing of scientific laboratories in schools in the past two years. [91285]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have had no consultations with industry during the past two years on the financing of science laboratories in schools although we do, of course, promote the Private Finance Initiative as a means for attracting private finance into the schools capital programme generally.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the school scientific laboratory teaching curricula in the sciences. [91282]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The proposals for a revised National Curriculum for schools issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 13 May include new measures to improve the quality of experiments pupils carry out when studying biology, chemistry and physics. A copy of the consultation materials was placed in the Library.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what recommendations he has made for the design, layout and organisation of school scientific laboratories; [91284]

(2) what studies he has undertaken in the last two years on the standards set for the design and equipment of school scientific laboratories for the teaching of (a) physics, (b) chemistry, (c) biology, (d) environmental sciences and (e) other sciences in (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools. [91286]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department has published guidance on the design and layout of school science rooms. Building Bulletin 82, "Area Guidelines for Schools", offers advice for both primary and secondary schools, while Building Bulletin 80, "Science Accommodation in Secondary Schools: A Design Guide", provides more detailed advice for the secondary sector, which requires dedicated, science accommodation. The design needs of secondary schools has been examined during the past two years as part of our rolling programme for producing, and updating, design guidance and, as a consequence, a replacement for Building Bulletin 80 will be published during the coming month.

A-level History

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of change in the proportion of A-level history students choosing to study (a) pre-1066 and (b) medieval English history in the last 20 years; [91555]

(2) what recent research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the teaching of (i) pre-1066, (ii) medieval and (iii) post-1485 English history; [91556]

(3) what plans he has to ensure that A-level history students have the opportunity to study pre-1066 English history; [91557]

(4) what representations he has received concerning the place of pre-1066 English history in the A-level history syllabus; [91558]

(5) what representations he has made to A-level examination boards concerning the A-level history syllabus. [91559]

Mr. Mudie: Information about the proportion of A-level history students choosing to study pre-1066 and medieval English history is not collected centrally. The Department has commissioned no recent research into the teaching of English history. To date we have received one representation on the availability of pre-1066 English history at A-level, as well as early day motion 829 tabled on 15 July. In the light of the concerns expressed, we have asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority, which is responsible for regulating and approving all A-level specifications offered by the awarding bodies in England, to investigate this matter urgently.

Local Education Authorities

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will take steps to ensure that local education authorities which have been severely criticised in Ofsted reports do not offer generous early retirement packages to their chief education officers. [91790]

Ms Estelle Morris: The issue of early retirement is a matter for individual local authorities in the light of relevant employment and education law. We expect them to take decisions with the aim of securing value for money for the whole education budget and high quality education for their pupils.

Teachers

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of teachers in maintained (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in England and Wales were aged (i) under 30, (ii) 31-40, (iii) 41-50 and (iv) over 50 years in each of the years from 1996 to 1999. [91942]

Ms Estelle Morris: Full-time qualified teachers in the maintained sector in England and Wales, 1996 and 1997, by phase and age are as follows:

Percentage of all ages

	31 March 1996	31 March 1997
Nursery and Primary
Under 31	20.9	22.0
31-40	20.2	20.0
41-50	43.1	42.9
Over 50	15.7	15.2
All ages	100.0	100.0
Secondary
Under 31	16.8	17.9
31-40	25.3	24.3
41-50	43.3	43.3
Over 50	14.6	14.5
All ages	100.0	100.0

Data on teachers by age are not yet available for 1998 and 1999.
1997 data are provisional.

British Teachers (EU Schools)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if British nationals employed through the European Union to teach in European schools are entitled to receive promotion and responsibility allowances on their national scale; and if he will make a statement. [91796]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The overall salary level for teachers employed by the DfEE and assigned to posts in the European Schools is determined by the European Schools Board of Governors and set out in its document "Regulations for Members of the Seconded Staff of the European Schools". The DfEE fully meets its statutory obligations in respect of promotion and responsibility allowances paid with national salary.

School Teachers (Attacks)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many attacks on school teachers at schools in Greater London by (a) pupils and (b) parents, were reported in each of the last five years. [92007]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not available centrally.

Staff Movements

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what research he has commissioned on the impact of staff recruitment and retention in sixth form colleges of the salary differentials between the further education and secondary school sectors; [91818]

(2) what assessment he has made of the likely impact on staff recruitment and retention in sixth form colleges of the current proposals to reform the salary structure in primary and secondary schools. [91815]

Mr. Mudie: While we have not commissioned specific research, we meet regularly to discuss recruitment and retention issues with representatives of staff and employers in sixth form colleges and further education colleges generally. The Government have injected £725 million of new funds into further education over this year and next and we also welcome the Further Education Funding Council's proposals to increase the funding for full time 16–49-year-old students.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what monitoring his Department undertakes of the flows of teaching staff between sixth form colleges and secondary schools; and if he will publish the available data for each of the last five years. [91819]

Mr. Mudie: The Local Government Management Board undertakes an annual survey of teacher recruitment and retention on behalf of the Sixth Form Colleges' Employers Forum. Ministers meet regularly with representatives of the Employers Forum to discuss these, and other issues.

Data from the survey are available for the years 1993 to 1997 and are reproduced in the following table:

Year	Leavers to schools	Recruitment from schools
1993	35	93
1994	55	82
1995	40	91
1996	58	86
1997	85	35

Benefit Recipients

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Perth (Ms Cunningham) of 1 July 1999, Official Report, column 244, if he will list the current numbers of recipients of each benefit listed broken down to show the number of recipients per head of the adult population in each region and nation for each of the last three years. [90940]

Angela Eagle: The information has been placed in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of recipients of housing benefit in the form of (a) single room rent, (b) full local reference rent and (c) partial local reference rent in each London borough in each year since they were introduced. [91782]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

The table provides the number of recipients who were being paid under the Local Reference Rent and Single Room Rent Schemes. The first column includes those recipients who received 50 per cent. top-up above the Local Reference Rent.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research he has commissioned on the impact of the single room rent provision on housing benefit; what were the findings of that research which has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [91778]

Angela Eagle: In June 1997, this Department and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions jointly commissioned the London Research Centre to carry out a study on the impact of the rent restriction rules introduced in 1996—the Local Reference Rent and the Single Room Rent. The study also focused on exceptional hardship payments and pre-tenancy determinations. The findings have been published by DETR in the report entitled "Housing Benefit and the Private Rented Sector", a copy of which was placed in the Library.

We are considering the future of the Single Room Rent as part of our review of Housing Benefit. We will be taking account of all the available research as well as the implications for public expenditure and work incentives.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91882]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the Written Answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

Since the date of the information previously provided, this Department has employed an additional 23 young people under the New Deal arrangements bringing the total to 41.

CSA

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of CSA cases (a) went to appeal and (b) succeeded on appeal in the last year for which figures are available. [91837]

Angela Eagle: The total number of live Child Support Agency (CSA) cases as at 31 December 1998[1] was 873,000. During the period 1 January 1998 to 31 December 1998 there were 7,217 CSA appeals (0.83 per cent. of 873,000) of which 4,740 (65.7 per cent.) were decided in the appellant's favour.

[1] 1998 is the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average cost of the appeal procedure for CSA cases. [91838]

Angela Eagle: The Child Support Agency, who deal with child support appeals to the point where they are submitted to The Independent Tribunal Service/The Appeals Service (ITS/TAS), advise that the average cost of a maintenance appeal is £457.31; the average cost of a departure referral is £475. ITS/TAS advise that the national unit cost of clearing a child support appeal was £221 in the 1998–99 financial year, the last year for which figures are available.

Australia

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last met the Australian Social Security Minister; and what discussions were held on the social security agreement between the United Kingdom and Australia. [92035]

Mr. Timms: I met Senator Jocelyn Newman, the Australian Minister for Family and Community Services, on 12 July. Senator Newman informed me that, because the United Kingdom Government do not uprate State Retirement Pensions paid in Australia, her Government intended to terminate the bilateral social security agreement between the United Kingdom and Australia. Senator Newman subsequently issued a public statement to this effect.

It would be unfortunate if there was an end to this long-standing agreement. UK and Australian pensioners would lose out, although no one already receiving a benefit under the agreement would be affected. The UK Government will continue to work closely with the Australian Government on issues of common concern.

NIRS2

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many pensioners have suffered unreasonable delays in receiving contributory benefits as a result of NIRS2 problems; [92193]

(2) how many pensioners have so far received £10 compensation as a result of NIRS2 problems; and how many are still due to receive payment. [92194]

Mr. Timms: NIRS2 was originally due to be operational by February 1997. Delays in completing the system have inconvenienced many benefit claimants.

The number of pensioners who have suffered significant delays because of the NIRS2 problems may be up to 285,000.

The number of pensioners who have received £10 compensation as a result of NIRS2 problems, to 30 June, is 166,989. The total number of pensioners entitled to the £10 compensation payment will not be known until all cases have been reviewed.

HEALTH

NHS Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the National Health Service trust and health authority appointments which were not made by the due date and which remained outstanding on 1 June. [90992]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 21 June 1999, Official Report, column 228. Information for 1 July 1999 is now available and is given in the table.

List of Health Authority and National Health Service Trust appointments which expired in 1998 and for which no appointment had been made by 1 July 1999

Region	Body	No. of chairs	No. of non-executives
North West	Liverpool Women's Hospital National Health Service Trust[1]	0	1
	Wirral Hospital NHS Trust[2]	0	1
Northern and Yorkshire	Calderdale and Kirklees Health Authority[3]	0	1
London	Croydon Community Health NHS Trust[4]	0	1
	Enfield Community Care NHS Trust[5]	0	1
Trent	Grantham and District Hospital NHS Trust[6]	0	1
South West	Royal United Hospital Bath NHS Trust[7]	0	1
West Midlands	Walsall Community Health NHS Trust[8]	0	1
Total		0	8

[1] In January, the Trust decided that they wanted to review their establishment with aim of possibly reducing the number of board members from five to four. At the end of April the Trust made the decision to stay with five board members. A collective decision was made that in trying to identify candidates that recommendations should go at the same time as recommendations to fill the November appointment.

[2] Submission to fill the vacancy sent to Minister on 8 June 1999. Delay in putting forward recommendations due to Chairmanship not being filled until March and wanting to take in to account new chairman's views on possible recommendations.

[3] Vacancy has been outstanding since June 1998. RO have been searching for suitable female candidates to put forward after discussing the requirements with the local chair. Have now identified suitable candidates who are meeting the local chairman informally later this month. A submission will go forward after local discussions are complete.

[4] New chairman appointed 1 December 1998—taking opportunity to assess the strength and weaknesses of the board before considering candidates for this vacancy.

[5] Minister indicated that he wanted ethnic minority candidate to consider for the remaining vacancy on this board. Suitable candidates specific to the local area are still being identified.

[6] When making the submission in November 1998 there were three appointments which came to an end plus on ad-hoc vacancy that needed to be filled. Regional Chairman recommended that only two of the four posts be filled. This would allow them to identify other suitable candidates coming forward from the national ad. Given that the Trust are now likely to merge the vacancy is being held open pending possible merger.

[7] Region have been searching for a suitable candidate to put forward. A submission was sent to Ministers on 6 July with candidates to fill the vacancy.

[8] Minister asked in last round for ethnic candidate to be put forward for consideration. There are few ethnic candidates on RO database and have been trying to find suitable candidates to put forward. Submission sent to Minister on 6 July.

Data Series

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new data series separated by gender, race, disability and age have been commissioned by his Department since June 1997. [90831]

Mr. Hutton: The Department already collects and publishes a range of information about its work force analysed by gender, race, disability and age. We collect ethnicity and disability data using the Cabinet Office's classification. Further details are available from http://www.doh.gov.uk/public/stats1.htm. In addition, this Department carried out a staff attitude survey in September 1998. The information that respondents were asked to provide included details of gender, race, disability and age. Analyses using these categories were included in the survey findings.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure equal access to services for infertility treatment across the country. [91005]

Mr. Hutton: We have pledged to tackle unacceptable levels of geographical variations in access to infertility treatment and have set in motion a programme of work to achieve that aim. A Departmental survey of current health authority infertility service provision is taking place at the moment to enable the cost implications of any policy changes to be estimated. The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists aim to complete their third, and final, set of evidence based clinical guidelines on infertility this autumn and these will indicate the circumstances in which infertility treatment can be most clinically effective. We can then move towards fairer access to National Health Service infertility services where those most able to benefit from such treatment receive it.

Fluoride Review

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list (a) the professional, academic and other qualification, (b) the organisation represented by, (c) the declarable interests of, and (d) the period of appointment of, each member of the scientific review team examining fluoride and health; [90993]

(2) when the scientific review team examining fluoride and health was appointed; when it first met; and how long it is expected to continue; [90996]

(3) when he expects the results of the scientific review examining fluoride and health to be published; [90994]

(4) what are the terms of reference of the scientific review of fluoride and health commissioned from York University. [90995]

Mr. Denham: The scientific review will assess the evidence for the safety and efficacy of fluoridation of drinking water to prevent caries. The review is being led by Professor Jos Kleijnen, Director, National Health Service Centre for Reviews and Dissemination at the University of York. His team comprises two Research Fellows from the Centre and a Senior Lecturer in Dental Public Health. An advisory group offering a range of expertise and perspectives will also be appointed to oversee its scientific rigour and impartiality. The contract between the Department and Professor Kleijnen begins in August and the review is due to be completed by the end of February 2000 and we will consider publication then. The date for the first meeting is being considered.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his letter of 30 June, regarding beta interferon, what plans he has to improve the quality of life for multiple sclerosis sufferers. [90810]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service is there to provide services for everybody on the basis of clinical need and it provides a considerable number of services to which people with Multiple Sclerosis have access. Under the present system it is, of course, for health authorities and primary care groups to plan and arrange the services available to people in their care. They are closest to the people they serve and best placed to respond sensitively to their needs.

We remain committed to improving standards of healthcare. We have set out our plans to address unacceptable variations in services via a modernisation programme to deliver more consistent and higher quality care for patients. New treatments, including new medicines, are introduced into the NHS as fast as possible where they represent a genuine therapeutic advance and are cost effective.

In addition, the move to new commissioning arrangements will bring about improvements in services for people with conditions like MS. Longer term agreements, reflecting dialogue between clinicians and focusing on health improvement and quality objectives will increase the emphasis on programmes of care that cross the traditional boundaries to meet patients' needs best.

We are likely to ask the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to prepare guidance on the place of beta interferon among the range of interventions and services available for MS sufferers.

Stroke Services

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the National Service Framework for Older People will improve access to organised stroke services; and if he will make a statement. [91325]

Mr. Hutton: An external reference group (ERG) was set up to advise the Government on the development of the National Service Framework (NSF) for Older People. A number of task groups were set up to support the ERG and one of these is looking at stroke. The aim of the NSF for Older People is to improve the quality of, and reduce variations in, NHS services for older people, including older people who have had a stroke.

The ERG will be reporting to Ministers in the coming months and it is too early to anticipate their advice. However, emerging findings will be published in the autumn with the NSF itself following in Spring 2000.

Injury Prevention Programme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the cost of implementing council common position 70/98 of 23 November 1998 [OJ C404]; what was his position on this proposal; if qualified majority voting procedures applied; and if he will make a statement. [91843]

Ms Jowell: The United Kingdom voted in favour of the proposal for the injury prevention programme set out in Common Position 70/98 under the qualified majority voting procedure and now adopted by Decision No 372/1999/EC.

The programme is a valuable initiative which we believe will enhance injury prevention work in the UK for a relatively modest outlay. In particular it will allow for the further development of a Community injury database, initially a continuation of the European Home and Leisure Accident Surveillance System (EHLASS), which has driven the raising of safety standards safety throughout Europe.

Implementation of the programme is expected to cost euro 14 million (estimated £9.9 million) over five years, of which the UK contribution is estimated at £358,000 per annum. This, however, will be offset by payments the UK will receive under the programme for the supply of information to the database. The precise figures for these payments has yet to be determined but similar payments to the UK under the EHLASS system in 1996 amounted to £216,000.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91886]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

The reply of 25 May 1999 gave the number of new deal staff recruited into the Department as of 1 April 1999. Since then, the Department has recruited three further employees under the new deal programme. We have now recruited a total of 11 staff, of whom five are in the 18–24-year-old category.

Health Impact Assessments

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of health impact assessments, with special reference to the work of the Health Development Agency. [91910]

Ms Jowell: We are committed to applying health impact assessments to relevant key Government policies, including those with indirect health consequences, in order to protect and improve people's health. These assessments will build awareness of health and health inequality into the policy making process at every level. We anticipate the Health Development Agency maintaining an up-to-date public health evidence base which will help to underpin health impact assessments.

Detoxification Centres

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government have taken to establish detoxification centres. [91847]

Ms Jowell: Local authorities and health authorities are responsible for determining local needs and priorities for drug and alcohol treatment in their areas and for arranging the provision of services accordingly through the statutory or voluntary sector. Such services could include detoxification where a need for such a service is identified.

One of the objectives of the Government's drugs strategy is to increase the participation of problem drug users in treatment programmes. One of the main objectives of the United Kingdom anti-drugs co-ordinator's first annual report and national plan is that by the end of 1999–2000 each Drug action team will have to produce an action plan to meet the local demand for detoxification and substitute prescribing services and community based structured therapeutic programmes.

Centre for Tobacco Research

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department (a) has contributed to the establishment of and (b) plans to provide on an annual basis, for the Centre for Tobacco Research based at the University of Strathclyde. [92013]

Ms Jowell: The Department has made no contribution to the Centre for Tobacco Research, nor have we any plans to do so.

Polio Vaccine (Contamination)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on the implications of contamination of polio vaccine in the United Kingdom with simian virus 40 between 1955 and 1963, for the development of cancers in humans. [92020]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The Secretary of State has received no recent representations on the implications of contamination of polio vaccine with simian virus 40.

Methadone

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator has to tackle the problem of the misuse of prescribed methadone. [90893]

Ms Jowell: The Government are keen to reduce the availability of prescribed controlled drugs such as methadone on the illicit market. Revised clinical guidelines for doctors treating drug misusers were launched in April and sent to all GPs as well as specialists working within the field of drug misuse. They emphasise the importance of supervising the consumption of controlled drugs such as methadone, to improve patient compliance and prevent prescribed drugs reaching the illegal market. Instalment dispensing is also recommended, to avoid drug misusers receiving prescriptions for large quantities of drugs. The working group of experts which drew up the Clinical Guidelines also made a number of recommendations for additional controls on prescribing to addicts. These are intended to underpin the Guidelines by ensuring that only doctors who are properly trained and resourced engage in addiction treatment. The Government will soon be consulting on these proposals.

Drug Treatment Services

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he proposes to set targets for the reduction in waiting times for drug treatment services. [90899]

Ms Jowell: The United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator's Annual Report and National Plan details that by 2002 all Drug Action Teams will be required to have established a locally agreed maximum waiting time for admission into a drug treatment service and be monitoring agencies' performance. The Department currently has no plans to set a maximum centrally for waiting times for drug treatment services.

One of the conditions for local authorities to receive Drug and Alcohol Specific Grant moneys in 1999–2000 (about a quarter of them will) is to achieve three targets:

A 10 per cent. increase in the number of problem substance misusers participating in effective treatment and care programmes purchased or provided by local authorities.

A reduction in the time spent by problem misusers in waiting for an assessment of their needs, after engaging with a service, to 48 hours.

A 10 per cent. increase in the proportion of decisions to approve funding made within two weeks of a misuser having been formally assessed as needing funding for a service.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Russia (Nuclear Waste)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the extent of the problem of Russian ships storing decaying nuclear waste; and if he will make a statement. [91770]

Mr. Hoon: We are concerned about the poor state of repair of some Russian vessels around the Kola Peninsula used to store spent nuclear fuel and a lack of safe storage for this material ashore. A fuller assessment is set out in our "Background Brief" entitled "The Nuclear Environment in North-West Russia". This is available on the FCO website and I am placing a copy in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has personally seen some of the storage ships during his visit to Murmansk in February and has announced over £3 million of assistance.

We are actively working with the Russians, both directly and through international donor groups, to identify suitable projects. For example, Britain has offered to assist with the licensing of interim storage casks that would permit offloading spent fuel from the Lepse, a storage barge in a particularly unsafe condition and presently moored in Murmansk harbour.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further plans his Department has for assisting with the safe handling of nuclear waste in Russia; and if he will make a statement. [91769]

Mr. Hoon: We are in discussion with the Russian authorities, other international donors and industry experts to identify the priorities in what is a highly complex and large scale problem. An important prerequisite is a framework agreement with the Russian Government to deal with certain key issues such as the taxation, liability and auditing of nuclear assistance projects but we are looking forward to getting action on the ground at the earliest possible date. This process requires the input of various Departments here and we have convened a working group to co-ordinate the work.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91888]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the purpose of the publication, "Britain: Creativity, Innovation and Quality, Design Guidelines for Implementing the Strapline for a New Identity for Britain"; how many requests for copies have been received; which consultants were engaged in the selection process for the logo; and if he will make a statement. [91842]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member for Buckingham to the answer I gave to him on 11 May 1999, Official Report, column 117.

There have been requests for 702 copies of the guidelines.

No design consultants were engaged in the selection process for the logo. The conception and development of the strapline were undertaken internally by FCO officials and endorsed by Ministers.

Iraq

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 419, on Iraq, what action he has since taken to support the Indict campaign. [91789]

Mr. Hoon: We continue to support the Indict campaign. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary sent me a personal message of support to Indict in March, when the campaign held a meeting in the House to commemorate the eleventh anniversary of the Iraqi chemical weapons attack on the Kurdish town of Halabjah. I recently discussed the campaign with my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) and plan to speak at an Indict function in the margins of the Labour party conference. FCO officials are in regular contact with Indict representatives to offer advice and support as appropriate, and have briefed other governments on Indict's work.

Nationality Applications (New Delhi)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long applicants to the High Commission in New Delhi for British nationality wait for an initial interview; and what instructions he has issued to expedite dealing with applications. [92192]

Mr. Hoon: All applications for registration as a British citizen made to our overseas missions are passed to the Home Office for a decision. This process, at present, takes 20 months.

However, those resident overseas who feel that they may already have an entitlement to British nationality through circumstances of birth or descent are normally advised by the British mission to submit a passport application in order to establish their claim. They may be required to attend an interview if the entitlement is not clear.

All our overseas missions are governed by the Citizen's Charter. They aim to process properly documented passport applications within five working days.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's efforts to assist in finding a solution to the conflict in Sri Lanka. [92019]

Mr. Hoon: We believe a lasting solution to the ethnic conflict in Sri Lanka can be reached only through a political settlement. We have made clear that we are ready to help in the search for peace if both sides ask us to play a role.

Dependent Territories (Environment)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what follow-up action he has taken to the conclusions of the Conference on the Environment in the Dependent Territories, organised at the Zoo, Regents Park, on 29 and 30 June by his Department, in relation to (a) degradation of coral reefs and (b) mangrove swamps. [90729]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 20 July 1999]: I thank my hon. Friend for his valuable contributions to the recent conference, "A Breath of Fresh Air", about environmental issues in the UK's Overseas Territories. We are now establishing with Overseas Territories' governments the best ways to protect these key habitats, with support where appropriate from new funding announced in the March White Paper, "Partnership for Progress and Prosperity".

We are also publishing a report commissioned by the British Indian Ocean Territory Government on the problem of coral mortality in the Chagos Archipelago. We have commissioned an educational video for use in the Overseas Territories about key themes discussed at the conference, including coral reefs and mangrove swamps.

Tajikistan

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the peace process in Tajikistan; and if he will support an extension of the UN Mission of Observers there. [92154]

Ms Quin [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The Government fully support the peace process in Tajikistan and the efforts of the United Nations. We welcome recent positive developments and hope the constitutional referendum and Presidential elections will be held on time later this year. We supported renewal of the mandate of the UN observer mission for six months when it was last discussed in the Security Council in early May and agreed by UN Security Council Resolution 1240.

East Timor

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to support the proposed United Nations mission in East Timor; what level of troop deployment is planned for the mission; and what plans he has for UK troop deployment there. [92155]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 20 July 1999]: We have despatched seven British police officers with UN Bosnia experience and two Military Liaison Officers to East Timor. The United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET), which has a British head, is now at full strength and consists of 241 international staff members, 420 UN volunteers, 280 civilian police, 50 Military Liaison officers and 4,000 East Timorese staff. We have no plans to deploy further police or military personnel to the territory.

Cyprus

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the confidence-building measures and discussions between the two communities in Cyprus. [90466]

Ms Quin [holding answer 20 July 1999]: In line with the UN Secretary-General's initiative of 30 September 1998, his Special Representative, Dame Ann Hercus, has been conducting a process of on-island contacts with the leaders of the two communities aimed at reducing tensions and promoting progress towards a just and lasting settlement.

The UN Security Council, in its Resolution 1250 (1999) of 29 June, welcomed these contacts and urged the UN Secretary-General to invite the two leaders to enter without preconditions into comprehensive negotiations starting in the autumn. We have confirmed to the UN Secretary-General that he will have our full support in his efforts to get negotiations underway.

Yemen

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the trial in the Yemen of British citizens. [92241]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the Foreign Secretary's statement to the House 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 21. On 22 June the trial in Aden of the eight British nationals was adjourned until 25 July when the Court plans to deliver its judgment. British consular officials, who have attended the trial from the outset, will attend also for the judgment. I can make no further comment on the case at this stage since it remains sub judice.

Saharawi Refugees

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he is taking to assist the Saharawi refugees to return home. [91903]

Mr. Hoon: We fully support the United Nations in their efforts to repatriate the Saharawi refugees. We regularly urge both sides to cooperate with MINURSO in their efforts to prepare the way, and to keep to the UN Secretary-General's deadlines.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dairy Farming

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to promote agri-environment measures for smaller dairy farmers to offset lower commodity prices. [91298]

Mr. Morley: Agri-environment schemes provide payments for farmers to manage their land with the objective of protecting and enhancing the natural beauty and diversity of the countryside. The schemes are not designed to offset the effects of lower commodity prices. Payment rates are calculated on the basis of the income forgone and costs associated with managing the land in accordance with scheme requirements.

The schemes do, however, include measures which provide smaller dairy farmers with the opportunity of managing their land in an environmentally sensitive way.

The schemes are promoted through the issue of scheme literature, project officer advice and targeted publicity.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91894]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

We have recruited five individuals under the New Deal for Young People.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many appointments to quangos he made between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. [92047]

Mr. Morley: The following appointments have been made by my right hon. Friend the Minister:

(i) Between 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998: 228

(ii) Between 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999: 67

Mr. Singh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many members of Britain's (a) ethnic minority communities and (b) Asian community he appointed to quangos between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. [92118]

Mr. Morley: Two members of Britain's ethnic communities were appointed in each of the periods stated. All of these were members of the Asian community.

Departmental plans on equal opportunities, setting objectives and targets for improving representation of women, people from ethnic minority groups and people with disabilities, were published by the Government on 25 May 1999 and deposited in the Libraries of the House.

WALES

Oncologists

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of clinical and medical oncologists per 100,000 population for each health authority in Wales. [90805]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on NHS medical and dental staff is collected annually as at 30 September. The latest available information is in the following table. It gives the number of whole time equivalents (Wte) in post in September 1997.

Staff in post at 30 September 1997 (excluding locums) per 1 million population

TREASURY

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the reduction in employers' national insurance contributions in compensation for the climate change levy will go to public sector bodies. [89952]

Ms Hewitt: Provisional estimates suggest that, on the basis of the illustrative rates of climate change levy set out in the Customs and Excise consultation document, the climate change levy proposals, combined with the reduction in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions of 0.5 percentage points, might lower costs in the public administration sector by some £100 million to £150 million annually. The rates of levy set out in the Customs and Excise consultation document on the climate change levy are purely illustrative and final rates will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

Estimates were derived from economic data published by the Office for National Statistics.

Jill Dando

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will donate a sum equivalent to the revenue that the Inland Revenue will receive in inheritance tax from Jill Dando's estate to the reward being offered to catch her killer. [90623]

Mrs. Roche: I am unable to comment of the tax affairs of individuals.

Financial Services Act 1986

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many actions have been brought under section 133 of the Financial Services Act 1986; and how many such actions resulted in prosecution. [91072]

Ms Hewitt: We are not aware of any actions brought under this section.

Fuel Duty Rebate

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of the fuel duty rebate in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and what the projection is for (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [91404]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

Expenditure on fuel duty rebate in Great Britain as a whole and the rate of rebate per litre for diesel (the fuel predominantly used by bus operators) in each of the years requested is as follows:

Year	Expenditure (£ million)	Rate of Rebate (Pence per litre)
1995–96	229	25.14
1996–97	228	25.14
1997–98	227	25.14
1998–99	271	29.85
1999–2000	333	35.07

Estimated

Expenditure in future years will depend on the total fuel consumed in operating eligible routes for which bus operators make claims for rebate, and on decisions still to be taken on the proportion of duty to be rebated in each year.

Tax Certificates

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure that all applications to the Inland Revenue for CIS6 and CIS5 certificates are processed before 1 August; and if he will make a statement. [90787]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 14 July 1999]: The Inland Revenue is doing all it can to ensure that certificate applications are processed quickly. It takes about four weeks to process a certificate application (against one week for registration cards) because of the compliance checks. Where a subcontractor applies for a certificate late there may now not be enough time to make sure that it is processed before 1 August. Where the Inland Revenue consider that there is not enough time to process the certificate application they will arrange for a registration card, or temporary tax payment card to be issued so that the subcontractor can be paid.

River Severn (Deaths)

Mr. Lock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many members of the public have died in (a) accidents and (b) suicides in the River Severn in the Wyre Forest District Council area in the past 10 years; and what was the cause of death in each case. [91581]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Lock, dated 21 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on how many members of the public have died in the River Severn.

Between 1993 and 1998, there were seven deaths in the Kidderminster Registration District, which is broadly coterminous with the area administered by Wyre Forest District Council, where the River Severn was mentioned on the coroner's certificate of death. In addition, there were three deaths which occurred in a river not specified by the coroner. Corresponding data for years prior to 1993 are not available.

The verdicts and underlying causes of the ten deaths are given in the table.

Number of deaths in Kidderminster registration district, where the River Severn or an unspecified river is mentioned, 1993–98

Verdict	Cause	River Severn	River not specified
Suicide	Drowning	1	0
Open	Drowning	3	1
	Cause not ascertainable	1	0
Accident	Fall into water	1	1
	Fall into water in course of epileptic fit	0	1
	Drowning	1	0

NIRS2

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a copy of the terms of the contract under which Andersen Consulting are currently developing the NIRS2 computer system. [91652]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 July 1999]: The terms of the contract with Andersen Consulting are commercially confidential and are exempt from disclosure under paragraph 13 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Construction Industry Scheme

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many firms are on the waiting list to register for the construction industry scheme; and what is the average time taken from application to registration. [91655]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 July 1999]: There is no waiting list for subcontractors who wish to apply for registration cards or certificates for the construction industry scheme. A subcontractor must complete an application form and take it to a tax office for an identity check. This can be done almost immediately. On average it takes one week to process an application form for a registration card.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advertisements the Inland Revenue has placed to inform businesses of the need to register under the new construction industry scheme; and what has been the cost of the advertisements. [91656]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The Inland Revenue has paid for five phases of national advertising to inform business, contractors and subcontractors about the construction industry scheme at a total cost of £2,450,000. The key messages have progressively moved from general awareness raising, through a call to action to 'apply now' and has featured in the main tabloids, construction press and commercial radio. On top of this there has been local and regional advertising of the local office opening times.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of businesses that should have registered under the construction industry scheme by 1 August; and what projection he has made of the number which will have done so by that date. [91658]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The Inland Revenue estimates that approximately 635,000 businesses are due to complete application forms for the construction industry scheme. They expect 90 per cent. to have done so by 1 August.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish for each year from 1990 the numbers of (a) maternities and (b) sets of twins, triplets, quadruplets, quintuplets, sextuplets and septuplets born in England and Wales. [92262]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 21 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the numbers of maternities in England and Wales.

The requested data are shown in the following table:

Maternities in England and Wales by multiplicity 1990–1998

Social Security Acts

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received the report from the Government Actuary on the operation of the Social Security Acts for the five years from April 1990. [92525]

Dawn Primarolo: I have today laid before the House a report that the Government Actuary has made on the operation of the Social Security Acts between 6 April 1990 and 5 April 1995 in accordance with Section 166 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

It provides a detailed look forward into the next century of the possible future costs of benefits paid out of the National Insurance Fund and the contributions likely to be needed to pay for them.

Following the Social Security (Transfer of Functions etc.) Act 1999 this report is made to both the Treasury and the Secretary of State for Social Security—but the responsibility for laying the report rests with Treasury Ministers.

Mortgages

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the regulation of mortgages. [92362]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury has issued a discussion document to form the basis of a review to determine whether there is a case for the statutory regulation of advice on and marketing of mortgages. Copies of the document have been placed in the Vote Office and Libraries of the House.

Invest to Save

Ms Moran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend the first round of Invest to Save pilot projects. [90884]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) on 19 May 1999, Official Report, column 366.

The second bidding round of the Invest to Save Budget is presently under way. Expressions of interest have been submitted to the Treasury and bidders will be advised in due course whether they will be invited to submit proposals for the final bidding stage. I expect to announce winners at the end of the year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BNFL

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the members of the Liabilities Management Unit of BNFL. [92055]

Mr. Battle: The Liabilities Management Unit (LMU) at BNFL consists of 34 BNFL staff and 1 agency worker based at the Sellafield and Berkeley sites. The Head of the LMU is Robin Sellers, based at Sellafield.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list his reasons for announcing his proposals for BNFL through a written answer rather than an oral statement. [92058]

Mr. Battle: As the hon. Member is aware, it is a matter of judgment whether to make an announcement through a written answer or oral statement.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the new index against which BNFL's safety, health and environmental performance will be measured. [92054]

Mr. Battle: BNFL and the Government regard safety, health and the environment as being of paramount importance. That is why the targets set for BNFL look to the company to achieve continuous and measurable improvement against the Safety, Health and Environment (SHE) Index. The Index is based on similar indices used in the United States, including the US Department of Energy, and will measure the company's performance against standards achieved in conventional, radiological and environmental safety, and health. The Index is being developed by BNFL in close discussion with the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and the Environment Agencies.

Miners (Respiratory Diseases)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial controls have been put in place by his Department regulating the flow of payments of compensation to former miners suffering from respiratory disease. [92063]

Mr. Battle: Since assuming the former British Coal's health liabilities in January 1998 the Government have made clear that they will provide the funds necessary to meet the cost of legitimate claims. Financial structures will be put in place to ensure that the funds are properly disbursed. Claims will be settled as rapidly and as fairly as possible within this framework.

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of those ex-miners receiving compensation for respiratory diseases are having their cases settled under the expedited payment system; and what proportion are receiving payments under the system by which compensation is reduced due to other factors. [92062]

Mr. Battle: To date Healthcall—the service provider – has carried out some 3,300 spirometry tests. Of these, we have processed 1,793 and offers of expedited payments have been made to 500 of these. The number actually receiving payments will depend on how many claimants accept the offers.

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the total number of recipients of compensation for former miners suffering from respiratory diseases; how many cases have been (a) settled and (b) paid; what is the average number of cases settled each week; and what steps he is taking to speed up the processing of claims. [92099]

Mr. Battle: The Department have received some 77,000 claims from former miners, and their dependants, for compensation for respiratory diseases. We anticipate receiving in excess of 100,000 in total. The Department is unable to estimate how many of these claimants will receive compensation until they have all passed through the procedures contained in the handling arrangements which are still to be finally agreed with those representing the claimants. Pending the signing of the handling arrangement, full and final settlements have so far been made to the seven lead cases decided by the court. In addition the Department has made offers of interim payments and bereavement awards to 13,700 claimants, totalling some £31 million.

A contract for a national programme of spirometry testing for all respiratory disease claimants has been awarded and testing centres are being established in coalmining areas. This will enable us to make further interim payments and, in some cases, full and final offers to those who may not wish to pursue their claim further. We are also tendering for the delivery of the national medical assessment process and we hope to make the first full and final settlement offers later this year.

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many widows of deceased miners are currently awaiting interim payments for the Respiratory Disease Litigation Scheme; how many such widows have already received payments; how many are being paid each month; and what factors underlie the current backlog. [92064]

Mr. Battle: We have made some 500 interim payments in the form of bereavement awards, totalling nearly £4.3 million over the last six months. A further 1,600 claims, accompanied by valid death certificates supporting the claims, have been received but require validation of the deceased's work history. The procedure for carrying out this validation has been agreed only very recently with the plaintiff solicitors. We are now processing these outstanding claims as a matter of urgency.

Debts (Late Payment)

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports he has received from the late payment monitoring unit at Bradford University since the implementation of the first stage of the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998. [91902]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The Credit Management Research Centre, based at Leeds University Business School since July 1998, has produced two "Credit Management Quarterly Review Results Bulletins" since the implementation of the first phase of the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act in November 1998. They have covered the periods October 1998 to December 1998 (published in March 1999) and January 1999 to March 1999 (published in June 1999) respectively.

The Quarterly Reviews report on and analyse payment and credit trends and specific topical issues, including the introduction of the late payment legislation. My officials keep in close touch with the work of the Centre.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 21 July. [91813]

The Prime Minister: This morning I met the Israeli Prime Minister and later visited Winsford in the Eddisbury constituency. Later today, in addition to my duties in the House, I will have meetings with ministerial colleagues and others.

Anglo-Italian Summit

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Anglo-Italian Summit. [92763]

The Prime Minister: I was pleased to host the British-Italian Summit on 19 and 20 July. This is the first such Summit to take place since 1995. In addition to Heads of Government, the Summit brought together Foreign, Defence and Industry Ministers, allowing us to develop and broaden our dialogue with one of our key partners in Europe. The Summit produced three joint declarations on strengthening European Defence Capabilities; a proposal for action from our two Governments on a new European Social Agenda; and reform of the European Commission. Copies have been placed in the Library. The Summit highlighted the congruence of views between Britain and Italy on these and a number of other issues, and specifically identified areas where Britain and Italy would work together, for example defence industry restructuring and energy liberalisation.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial Appointments (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions and on what dates since 1969 his Department has reviewed the method of judicial appointments in Northern Ireland; and what steps have been taken to eliminate discrimination on the grounds of religion or community origin. [91537]

Mr. Vaz: The Lord Chancellor assumed responsibility for judicial appointments in Northern Ireland in 1973. Successive Lord Chancellors, including the present Lord Chancellor, have adopted a policy of continuous improvement to the appointments processes, of appointment purely on merit and of ensuring equality of opportunity.

The Lord Chancellor has recently extended his practice of advertising vacancies for judicial office to include the post of High Court Judge and such advertisements include a statement on the Lord Chancellor's equal opportunities policy.

Posts are advertised (in professional journals) and there are job descriptions and detailed objective selection criteria as appropriate. Candidates are assessed against these criteria. Members of selection panels receive written and oral briefing which in particular covers equal opportunity issues.

All these measures support the Lord Chancellor's objective to ensure that judicial appointments procedures are open and transparent.

Appointments to the judiciary and magistracy and safeguards for protecting their independence are also part of the terms of reference of the Review of Criminal Justice currently in train.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate the overall composition of the judiciary in Northern Ireland according to (a) perceived community origin, (b) gender and (c) age. [91538]

Mr. Vaz: The current complement of full-time judicial office-holders in Northern Ireland is 53. The perceived community origin of appointees is not a factor in judicial appointments and so is not recorded as part of the judicial appointments process. Details of gender and age of these postholders are as outlined.

		Percentage
	Complement	Male	Female	Age 40–60 years	Age 61–72 years
Supreme Court Judges	11	100	0	5	6
County Court Judges	14	93	7	10	4
District Judges	4	75	25	3	1
Resident Magistrates	17	88	12	14	3
Masters	7	71	29	4	3

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the dates of judicial appointments in Northern Ireland since 1969, in each case describing the perceived community origin of the appointee. [91539]

Mr. Vaz: Judicial appointments in Northern Ireland from 1991 to July 1999 are as set out. Information prior to 1991 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The perceived community origin of appointees is not a factor in judicial appointments and so is not recorded as part of the judicial appointments process.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Love: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many court actions for mortgage repossessions have been brought in the last five years for which figures are available in (a) Edmonton and (b) Enfield Magistrates Court. [91801]

Mr. Vaz: Applications for mortgage repossessions are civil actions made in County Courts. The figures in Edmonton and Barnet County Courts are as follows:

Year	Edmonton	Barnet
1994	1,518	506
1995	1,106	459
1996	1,126	521

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date the Courts Service received appeal papers in respect of Mr. Liaqat Ali (ISB/F4245) husband of Mrs. Jehan Akhtar of Aylesbury; when he expects the Courts Service to let Mr. Ali and Mrs. Akhtar know the date of their appeal hearing; and if he will make a statement. [91786]

Mr. Vaz: It has not been possible to trace the appeal from the limited information provided. Although there are several appeals listed under the name of Liaqat Ali, none match the date of birth or reference number quoted; perhaps the hon. Member will write to me if further details can be provided.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average time between receipt of the Courts Service appeal papers in immigration cases and notification of the date of appeal to the parties in (a) May 1997, (b) May 1998 and (c) the most recent month for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [91787]

Mr. Vaz: No figures are available for May 1997. In May 1998, 40.9 per cent. of certified appeals and 100 per cent. of other appeals were issued within five working days. In June 1999, 100 per cent. of certified and other appeals were issued within five working days of receipt.

Child Abduction

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when is the next planned meeting of the Parent/Carer Child Abduction Co-ordinating Group. [91788]

Mr. Vaz: The Parent/Carer Child Abduction Co-ordinating Group met on 14 July. The next meeting of the Group is in the process of being arranged for mid-October 1999.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many individuals the Lord Chancellor's Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91895]

Mr. Vaz: At present, the Lord Chancellor's Department has recruited three young people under the New Deal. We have undertaken to employ a further nine people under the scheme and arrangements are being made for their recruitment and training.

CABINET OFFICE

Anti-drugs Co-ordinator

9. Mr. Shaw: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the work of the UK Anti-drugs Co-ordinator. [90879]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The UK Anti-drugs Co-ordinator published his first annual report and national plan in May. The report outlined progress made in relation to the strategy during 1998–99. The plan set challenging targets for the strategy for the short, medium and long term.

Genetically Modified Organisms

12. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will publish the Government's proposals to ensure effective inter-departmental co-ordination of policies on genetic modification, in preparation for the World Trade Organisation meeting in Seattle in November. [90882]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic-Modification reviews all areas of Government policy relating to genetic modification. There will be effective interdepartmental co-ordination in preparation for the World Trade Organisation meeting in Seattle with regard to all subjects under discussion.

13. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what sources of advice he uses on the issue of genetically modified food. [90883]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Government are advised on the issue of genetically modified foods by a range of sources including expert advisory committees such as the Advisory Committee for Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP). We also receive advice from the Chief Scientific Adviser, and the Chief Medical Officer.

My ministerial colleagues and I are also in regular contact with a large number of groups which have an interest in genetically modified foods such as consumer groups, environmental groups and biotechnology companies.

17. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what representations he has received on the documents relating to genetically modified food produced by the chief medical officer and the chief scientific adviser and published by them. [90888]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members, consumer groups, environmental groups and biotechnology companies.

Biotechnology Commission

14. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he plans that the new Biotechnology Commission should start its work. [90885]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: There will be two new advisory commissions—the Human Genetics Commission and the Agriculture and Environment Biotechnology Commission. Both of the new commissions will be in place by the end of the year.

Public Bodies

16. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to ensure the accountability of non-elected appointees to public bodies. [90887]

Mr. Kilfoyle: All board members of non-departmental public bodies are accountable through Ministers to Parliament. The Government are implementing a range of measures to strengthen accountability which were set out in "Quangos: Opening the Doors", copies of which are in the Libraries of the House.

Correspondence

18. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what is the average time it takes for Government departments to answer letters from hon. Members; and what plans he has to reduce the time taken. [90889]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The majority of letters from hon. Members to Ministers are replied to within the target times set by individual Departments, which is typically 15 to 20 working days. The Government are determined to improve their performance in handling correspondence from hon. Members and Ministers are now working towards replying to at least 90 per cent. of all correspondence within the target times set by their Department.

Social Exclusion Unit

19. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many visits to the city of Birmingham, and for what purpose, have been made by members of the Social Exclusion Unit. [90891]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Officials from the Social Exclusion Unit have visited Birmingham on a number of occasions as part of their work in preparing reports on a range of policy areas. Their purpose has included project visits, attendance at conferences and consultations with the local government and voluntary sector.

Anti-drugs Strategy

20. Mr. Healey: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's anti-drugs strategy in South Yorkshire. [90892]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Drug Action Teams in South Yorkshire have drawn up action plans for 1999–2000 establishing local priorities in line with the strategy. In preparing their 2000–01 action plans, they will review their priorities in the light of local circumstances. They will set local targets in line with those published in the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinators annual report and national plan.

EU Regulations

21. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to use the Intergovernmental Conference next year to reduce the amount of regulation from the European Union. [90894]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This Government achieved much through the Amsterdam Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) in terms of rasing the importance of the better European regulation agenda. In particular, the Protocol on subsidiarity and proportionality requires the Commission to take due account of the potential burdens from proposed legislation. These successes, along with the consensus among member states for a short, focused IGC, mean this Government do not intend to push for wide areas of the Treaties to be opened up for renegotiation. However, the Government do believe that the principles of better regulation should influence the EU's decisions making process and will be pushing for this as part of their wider objectives for reform of the Commission and other institutions.

Public-private Partnerships

22. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will ensure that pension rights of public service workers are protected in public-private partnerships. [90895]

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on what steps he is taking to protect the employment rights of public sector staff under public-private partnership deals. [90898]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office announcing the publication for consultation of a Statement of Practice on Staff Transfers in the Public Sector, 5 July 1999, Official Report, columns 388–89.

Better Regulation Initiative

23. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to introduce new regulations under the Better Regulation Initiative in the forthcoming parliamentary session. [90896]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government will continue to put forward draft orders for consideration of the House of Commons Deregulation Committee and the Delegated Powers and Deregulation Committee of the House of Lords. The Government are also looking at the scope for reform of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 and will bring forward proposals as soon as parliamentary time allows.

[2] A notional capital charge is included as part of running cost calculations for the building, as indicated in the Voted Supply Estimate. Capital charging was introduced from 1 April 1998. Departments pay capital charges, on the property they hold, from running cost provision. Departments record on the Vote matching receipts outside running costs classified as negative expenditure. Capital charge calculations are revised each year and based on the value of the property.
[3] Figure represents estimated annual running costs for Steel House. No charge was made to CCTA in 1998–99 as agreed with the property holder.

Figures reflect running cost expenditure in-year. Figure may be revised following completion of 1998–99 accounts.

Written Answers to Questions

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Authority Report

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to lay the Coal Authority's report and Accounts for 1998–99 before Parliament. [93058]

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Coal Authority's report and Accounts for 1998–99 will be laid before Parliament. [93062]

Mr. Battle: I have today laid a copy before each House of Parliament.

Photovoltaic Installations

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has held with the Energy Regulator on (a) two-way net metering and (b) industry charging and remuneration policy for photovoltaic installations. [91448]

Mr. Battle: Both issues are important in securing our objective that renewables and other forms of embedded generation can compete, in the long term, on equal terms with other forms of generation. The consultation paper "New and Renewable Energy—Prospects for the 21st Century", which I published on 30 March, invited comments on the issues surrounding the connection of embedded renewable generators to the electricity system. I am grateful to all those who responded.

I am currently considering the various responses to the consultation paper which have been received and will make an announcement in due course. I will continue to discuss the issues arising with the electricity companies when I meet them. Metering is an essential component of a competitive market. The Government would like to see the full value of exported electricity being offered to consumers in order to encourage the uptake of photovoltaic installations in the UK.

BNFL

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what new techniques, skills and strategies are being developed to manage more efficiently and effectively the liabilities of BNFL. [92053]

Mr. Battle: BNFL has established a Liabilities Management Unit to reinforce the strategic management of its liabilities. The key tasks are to provide assurance that liabilities are fully identified and quantified, and to provide value for money and continuous improvement in how the liabilities are discharged, drawing on the expertise of BNFL's Research and Technology Group in key technologies and processes. BNFL is also involved with others in the nuclear industry in sharing best practice in this area and a number of best practice guides have been published. I have asked the company to write to the hon. Member with further information.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92442]

Mr. Byers: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are his plans to address the problem of the Child Support Agency's backlog of periodical reviews. [93100]

Angela Eagle: Until December 1998, child support legislation required the Agency to reconsider child support assessments every two years. This process meant gathering all the many pieces of information used to make an assessment afresh. In many cases, parents failed to return review forms or to provide the necessary information and the reviews have become increasingly difficult to complete as time has passed. As a result, there are now some 350,000 outstanding periodical reviews in the Child Support Agency.

To address the backlog of periodic reviews and to release more of the Agency's resources for current work, however, I intend to bring forward legislation as soon as Parliamentary time allows retrospectively to repeal the provisions which govern this process. This will mean that there will no longer be a requirement to complete the outstanding reviews for past periods. However, the Agency will be taking forward a rolling programme over the next two years to review and update assessments from a current date. Where the parent with care is on benefit, this will happen automatically: parents who have applied voluntarily for child support will be offered the opportunity to have the assessment brought up to date. Also, any parent who wants to have the periodical review completed in their case can ask the Child Support Agency to complete this action and this will be done providing the information and evidence necessary to complete the process is supplied.

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the Annual Report of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate. [93101]

Mr. Timms: I have today published the second Benefit Fraud Inspectorate Annual Report.

We published our strategy in March 1999 for tackling fraud and improving security within the DSS and local authorities. We are determined to make sure we get it right from the start. That means delivering an improved secure system including the use of robust checks and safeguards. The BFI is a significant part of our strategy. Their role is to publish reports which support the strategy by helping to raise standards of administration and by contributing to the continuing development of the new strategy.

In this first full year of operation, considerable progress has been made. So far, the BFI has published 23 local authority reports, BA, CSA and CA reports, with a further 46 inspections either ongoing or due to be started by November 1999.

Working in partnership with those they inspect is leading to improvements in benefit administration and counter fraud work standards. The report includes case studies demonstrating the BFI impact on local authorities, such as the introduction of prosecution and security strategies, improved recovery of benefit overpayments and better liaison and exchange of information between BA and local authorities.

Copies of the published BFI Annual Report are available in the Library. Further copies are available on request.

Pensions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he will take to promote higher standards in occupational pension schemes following responses to the consultation on proposals for a Quality in Pensions accreditation scheme. [93102]

Mr. Timms: We have discussed with the pensions industry how best to develop improved standards in pensions. We have concluded we should develop best practice guidelines for occupational schemes that would be made widely available. I am pleased to announce the formation of a working group to take this work forward. The names of the working group members are as given. We have also published today a response to the consultation exercise which provides an analysis of the consultation responses and sets out our proposals for developing the best practice guidelines.

Best Practice Guidelines Working Group

In addition to the Government Departments that are represented the external members are:

Joanne Hindle—Association of British Insurers
Derek Sloan—Association of Pension Lawyers
Susan Anderson—Confederation of British Industry
David Trevor—National Association of Pension Funds
Rachel Low—Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority
Ian Eggleden—Pensions Management Institute
Peter Crutchett—Society of Pension Consultants
Joanne Segars—Trades Union Congress.

The group will also include a representative from the public service schemes and will be chaired and supported by DSS officials.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he proposes to ensure that combined pension forecasts are introduced effectively and with the minimum additional burden on employers and pension providers. [93103]

Mr. Timms: I am pleased to announce the formation of a Pension Forecasting Advisory Group which will include representatives from employers and scheme providers. The group will consider how our proposals for introducing combined forecasts might best be implemented to achieve wide and effective adoption. It will advise on what supporting information and facilities need to be provided to ensure that individuals make the best use of the new information. In addition to the Government Departments that are represented the external members are:

Tony Tollerton—Association of British Insurers
Susan Anderson—Confederation of British Industry
Ben Jupp—DEMOS
Ralph Turner—EMAP
Keith Matthews—Financial Services Authority
George Russell—Government Actuary's Department
Ray Martin—National Association of Pension Funds
Chris Armitage—Unigate

There will also be a representative from the public service schemes and members from the Inland Revenue and DSS who will chair and support the group.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the circumstances in which a full-time carer aged 16 years may receive invalid care allowance, the effect on entitlement of the carer undertaking a course of education, and the role of Benefits Agency staff in assisting such carers. [91870]

Mr. Bayley: Carers aged 16 who care for a severely disabled person for at least 35 hours a week may receive Invalid Care Allowance (ICA), subject to satisfying the other conditions of entitlement. A carer of any age will not be entitled to ICA if they undertake a course of full-time education, which for ICA purposes is defined as 21 hours a week.

All carers who claim ICA are advised of the outcome of their claim and their right of appeal. In addition, the Benefits Agency are preparing a Multi-benefit bulletin to remind all staff of the other bodies who can help young carers and highlight the importance of being sympathetic to a young person's needs.

War Pensions Agency

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the final report of the review of the decision making and appeals process of the War Pensions Agency. [92407]

Mr. Bayley: Copies of the War Pensions Agency "Review of Decision Making and Appeals Process" Final Report has been placed in the Library today.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92450]

Mr. Darling: I refer my right hon. Friend to my written answer to the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 12 July 1999, Official Report, column 62.

Pensions (National Insurance)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for (i) flat-rate compensation payments and (ii) compensation payments relating to interest forgone (a) the total number of people who have received such payments arising from delays in payment of state retirement pensions because of problems with the NIRS2 computer system, (b) the total cost to date of such payments, and (c) the total cost which he expects to have accrued when the problems with the NIRS2 system have been resolved. [92530]

Mr. Timms: The total number of pensioners who have received flat-rate compensation payments is 166,989 at a cost of £1,669,890. In addition, a further £31,141.84 has been paid in compensation to pensioners following payment of arrears of benefit under the Departmental Special Payments Scheme.

Up to 30 June, no compensation payments have been made relating to interest forgone.

The total costs accrued because of the NIRS2 problems will not be known until recovery is complete.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by (1) what date he expects all retirement pensioners to be in receipt of the full retirement pension to which they are entitled on the basis of their complete record of national insurance contributions; [92481]

(2) if he will make a statement on progress made in resolving the delays to retirement pension payments associated with the introduction of the NIRS2 computer system. [92479]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for North Thanet (Mr. Gale) on 21 April 1999, Official Report, column 591.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) the number of persons currently in receipt of (i) the basic state retirement pension alone and (ii) the basic state retirement pension and SERPS, who are currently being underpaid because of problems with the NIRS2 computer system, (b) the average weekly amount by which such pensions fall short of the correct figure, (c) the total amount which has been underpaid since April 1998, (d) the number of pensioners so affected in the week in which that number reached its peak, (e) the number of pensioners with SERPS underpayments of (1) more than £90 per week, (2) more than £80 per week, (3) more than £70 per week, (4) more than £60 per week and (5) more than £50 per week. [92480]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

We estimate that approximately 285,000 pensioners have been affected by the NIRS2 computer system problems. Underpayments are expected to be between 1p and, in exceptional cases, £100 per week.

The total amount of Retirement Pension which has been underpaid between April 1998 and March 1999 is estimated to be in the region of £25 million.

Child Poverty

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates he has made of the number and proportion of children living in poverty in (a) North West Leicestershire and (b) Leicestershire with Leicester; and what the comparable figures are for (c) the East Midlands and (d) England. [92080]

Mr. Timms: We recognise that poverty is a many faceted concept. One indicator used is to look at the numbers and proportions of individuals in households where the equivalised household income is below proportions of the contemporary national average. The tables show the numbers of children in households with below 50 per cent. and 60 per cent. of contemporary mean income. Information is not available for geographic areas smaller than regions.

[1] Sample sizes are small for the East Midlands. The estimate is based on a sample of less than 100 households.

Notes:

1. All figures are estimates and are taken from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI)' data set which is based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS). The FRS covers Great Britain, and the national average income used in the tables is that for Great Britain. It does not include Northern Ireland. 1996–97 is the latest year for which information is available. The figures presented will be subject to sampling error.

2. The income measure used is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income (that is to say income that is adjusted to reflect the composition of the household). It is standard HBAI practice to give results for income both before and after housing costs, in order to allow for the effect of variations in housing costs between households. Results are also provided including and excluding the self-employed, reflecting the inherent uncertainty of income measures for the self-employed.

3. Numbers and percentages below half average income before housing costs are sensitive to the choice of equivalence scale.
4. Due to the sampling method and sample sizes used in the FRS, results are not available below government office regional level.
5. Dependent children are defined as: an individual aged under 16 or an unmarried 16 to 18 year old on a course up to and including 'A' level standard.

5. Local Authorities/Government Office Regions are assigned by matching postcodes against the 1999 postcode directory.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Regional Chambers

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will designate the remaining regional chambers. [92872]

Mr. Caborn: I am pleased to announce that we have today issued:

a direction to the South East of England Regional Development Agency designating the South East of England Regional Assembly as its regional chamber;

a direction to the East of England Development Agency designating the East of England Regional Assembly as its regional chamber; and a direction to the South West of England Regional Development Agency designating the South West Regional Chamber as its regional chamber.

Section 8 of the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998 provides that if the Secretary of State is of the opinion that there is a body which is representative of those in the RDAs area with an interest in its work, and that body is suitable to be given the role of regional chamber for the RDA, he may designate it.

RDAs must take full account of regional interests. Regional chambers will provide a mechanism through which RDAs can take account of regional views and account for their activities. Ministers expect that each RDA will have regard to the chamber's view in preparing its strategy, consult the chamber on its corporate plan and give an account of its performance to the chamber.

I am currently considering an application for designation from the remaining region and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Secondary Materials (Waste Strategy)

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the results of the work commissioned by the Government into policy instruments to correct market failures in the demand for secondary materials, referred to in the draft Waste Strategy for England and Wales, will be published. [92880]

Mr. Meale: The report of the research commissioned by my Department from independent work commissioned by my Department from independent consultants ECOTEC Research and Consulting into "Policy Instruments to Correct Market Failure in the Demand for Secondary Materials" was published this week.

The Government will consider this work further and we would welcome views on the report as part of the draft waste strategy consultation by 17 September 1999. The results of this consultation exercise will help to inform the development of the final waste strategy.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Energy Efficiency

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made by Government Departments towards the target of improving energy efficiency by 20 per cent. in the nine years to 31 March 2000. [92881]

Mr. Meale: By 31 March 1998, energy efficiency in Government Departments had improved by just over 18 per cent. since 1990–91, as measured by the Total Cost Indicator.

Full details are given in the tables which have been placed in the Library; the overall estate improvement is shown in Table 4. The tables give a summary.

The tables include revisions to figures for earlier years revealing better performance than previously reported. In particular, the 1996–97 figure for the Army has been revised to take account of a large estate increase which had been inadvertently omitted, and this restores not only the Army's own steady progress but that of the whole government estate, to 17.5 per cent. instead of to 15.1 per cent. as previously reported in that year.

Energy management in individual Departments is a matter for those Departments and their Green Minister. However, the Government aim to be at the forefront of good practice to improve energy efficiency, and progress is reviewed regularly by Green Ministers under the Chairmanship of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment. We have developed and are now piloting new performance indicators which will, for the first time, enable comparisons with independent standards of good practice across the economy. These are likely to form the basis of the new campaign starting in April 2000.

The results for the former Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport have now been consolidated for all earlier years to allow a continuous series for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. DETR's overall performance in 1997–98 has slipped relative to 1996–97 as a result of the continuing relocation and rationalisation of its accommodation in London and elsewhere, in particular, the need to run a number of old and new buildings in parallel while changes took place. However, the Department's two new headquarters buildings at Eland House and Ashdown House were fully occupied by the end of March 1998 so future results should reflect this.

[1] Progress is expressed as a percentage relative to the 1990–91 base year value of the performance indicator in question. Positive figures represent improvement. The standard indicator, against which the target to improve energy efficiency by 20 per cent. by 31 March 2000 is measured, is obtained by weather-correcting energy consumption and converting to costs using 'standard prices' for fuel (6p/kWh for electricity and 1.25p/kWh for all fossil fuels) then dividing by floor area. Conversation to money both reflects the relative costs of electricity and fossil fuel and their environmental impact, and the use of fixed prices eliminates the effects of tariff changes which distort the comparison of fuel bills.

[2] Although figures have been prepared on a consistent basis, caution should be exercised in comparing the energy use of different Departments and Agencies because of differences in their estate and the nature of their work. For example, the operational needs of prisons and the QEII Conference Centre mean that they have a pattern of energy use which is different from that of a Department which has predominantly office accommodation. Expenditure on energy and investment figures are included for information only. Investment figures relate to clearly identifiable energy efficiency measures undertaken by Departments. Energy efficiency is an integral part of all major construction projects, including building refurbishment and plant replacement and the figure '0' for some Departments does not necessarily mean there has been no investment, just that the investment was not clearly identifiable.

[3] The average performance figure for the civil estate cannot be derived by simply adding together the individual Departmental progress and dividing by the number of Departments because this does not allow for the large variations in consumption. The correct figure is obtained by calculating the value of the performance indicator for the year in question and the base year, for the civil estate as a whole, and calculating the reduction relative to the base year.

[4] The energy performance for MAFF's 'Main estate' and its 'Laboratories' continues to improve through ongoing investment in energy schemes, monitoring of energy at local level and taking appropriate action as well as central initiatives including continued staff awareness programmes.

[1] The DETR's figures have been compiled from the former Environment and Transport Departments. The Department now has a greater proportion of air-conditioned buildings than in the base year, because of estate rationalisation, relocation to new HQ buildings and inclusion of some Government Offices for the Regions. Performance in 1997–98 was adversely affected by parallel operation of both old and new buildings while staff moved from one to the other.

[2] HSE was removed from the DfEE estate on the formation of that Department. QEII Conference Centre is reported separately because of its business led demands. The initial sharp rise in consumption following the 1990–91 base year was directly attributable to increased revenue earning activity, which has continued throughout the reporting period, and the more recent decline in consumption reflects the effect of energy conservation measures undertaken at the site.

[3] Rationalisation of the estate since the base year has led to staff moving from several naturally ventilated buildings to more densely occupied air-conditioned buildings, all equipped with information technology equipment.

[4] Base year is 1991–92.

[5] Base year in 1991–92. Data for Natural Resources Institute no longer included following its transfer to the University of Greenwich.

[6] Base year is 1994–95 by which time energy efficient lighting and other improvements already installed in buildings which are already fully air-conditioned with intensive IT usage.

[7] Workload is increasing, affecting occupancy and requiring offices to be occupied for longer, increasing the use of energy. Greater use of information technology, expansion of the use of air conditioning and the upgrading of lighting levels has increased electricity consumption.

The Ministry of Defence (MOD) estate is different from the rest of the Government estate, and has been undergoing more radical changes. It is therefore treated in a slightly different way. In common with the civil estate, it has greatly increased its use of information technology.

In civil departments, the effect of estate changes is allowed for by dividing consumption by floor area. In MOD, floor area is sometimes not meaningful (e.g. in relation to security or runway lighting) and also not often available, so estate changes are allowed for by being explicitly excluded from the calculations, i.e. the energy consumption of new facilities is removed, and for facilities no longer part of the estate, the consumption for the last full year of operation is added back. In most cases, such changes are small compared to the total and can often approximately cancel each other out.

[8] It is almost impossible to produce any meaningful results to date for MOD's Procurement Executive (PE) since it has suffered major estate gains and losses over the past 10 years and now consists largely of one recently built large office. The standard MOD methodology produces a meaningless 'no change' result (since the present estate is almost entirely different from the original).

[9] This shows the combined results for the whole of the Government estate based on the data in tables 1, 2 and 3. It is not a simple average of the data, but reflects the proportion of total consumption represented by each part of the estate (see also note 3). Some Departments have a different base year, and the individually agreed base year has been used for the purposes of this table, where appropriate.

[10] In some instances the base year is not 1990–91, but for the purposes of tables 2 and 5 the agreed base year has been used in the calculation.

The figures quoted here for the Home Office have been weather-corrected in the same way as for all departments. Figures quoted elsewhere were provisional, not yet weather-corrected and therefore showed higher apparent progress.

Ryedale District Council

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide financial assistance to Ryedale District Council under the Bellwin scheme for costs incurred following the severe flooding between 5 and 14 March. [92882]

Mr. Meale: I am satisfied that financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme is justified in the case of Ryedale District Council given the exceptional nature of the floods and the damage caused. A scheme will, therefore, be established under section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Grant will be paid to the authority to cover 85 per cent. of the eligible costs above a threshold which have been incurred by the authority in dealing with the flooding.

Building Standards

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to promote high standards of service from local authority building control departments and private sector approved inspectors. [93019]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department and the National Assembly for Wales are today publishing 'Building Control Performance Standards', on behalf of the Construction Industry Council, the Local Government Association and the Association of Corporate Approved Inspectors, whose Building Control Services Steering Group drew up the document.

Building Control Performance Standards' sets out a series of eleven standards for the good conduct of building control, together with guidance to go with each of these standards.

The eleven standards in the new document cover:

the need for building control bodies to draw up, and make public, a policy on the provision of their building control service in a manner that meets their legal duties and is effective in helping to achieve compliance of building work with the Building Regulations;

the need for building control bodies to have adequate staff resources, supplemented if necessary by bought in support;

the need for building control bodies to undertake appropriate consultations with other agencies;

the need for clear feed back to the client following plans assessment, and for records of the plan checking process;

the need for appropriate site inspection regimes, and prompt action on contraventions, with associated records;

the need for appropriate certificates to be given to the direct client upon satisfactory completion of the work;

the need for retention of records for an appropriate period;

the need for suitable arrangements for continuous professional development and in-service training;

the need for procedures for self review of performance;

the need for adoption of quality management principles;

the need for building control bodies to observe the normal professional standards and business ethics expected of service providers.

Competition between local authority building control departments and approved inspectors is an important spur to efficiency, and beneficial to the builders and developers who are the immediate clients for the building control service. Building control must also be effective in helping to secure the compliance of building work with the requirements of the Building Regulations, which exist to promote the health, safety, welfare and convenience of building users, as well as energy efficiency.

Building Control Performance Standards' recognises that the building control function is the same whether it is carried out by a local authority or by an approved inspector. It sets out the ways in which all building control providers can work to achieve effective and efficient levels of service.

My Department is writing today to local authorities in England and to approved inspectors to ask them to commit themselves to adopt and apply the performance standards and have regard to the associated guidance. The National Assembly for Wales is taking parallel action in Wales. The Local Government Association and the Construction Industry Council will be monitoring the response of local authorities and approved inspectors to this initiative.

Officials of my Department and the National Assembly for Wales will be discussing with the Construction Industry Council, the Local Government Association, the Association of Corporate Approved Inspectors and other interested parties including the District Surveyors' Association and the Audit Commission, arrangements for a new advisory body on building control. This body will keep the performance standards and guidance under review and revise them as necessary. It will work with the bodies responsible for monitoring standards of service on the part of local authorities and approved inspectors, to maintain and raise building control standards.

Supporting People Policy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the Government intend to carry forward the implementation of their Supporting People policy. [93020]

[illegible]rescott: To ensure the most effective support for p[illegible] living in our communities who need it, I am establishing a new reference group to work with the Government on implementing our 'Supporting People' policy.

This is a cross-Government initiative, which will be co-ordinated by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR). It will work closely with the Departments of Health and Social Security, the Home Office and other parts of Government.

The reference group will comprise individuals nominated by organisations representing local authorities, other statutory agencies, service providers, and those using support services. In due course we will also be inviting a number of people with experience of day-to-day operation of the services to participate in a small Practitioners' Group. By working closely with interested parties to develop the detail of the new arrangements, my Department will ensure that our long-term objective becomes a workable and effective reality.

The introduction of the new funding arrangements for support services were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security in March, following extensive consultation.

We received more than 500 responses to our "Supporting People" consultation paper. They showed strong support for the principles underlying our proposals, and recognition that, for the first time, the provision of support services is being given the priority it deserves.

I am today publishing a summary of responses to the consultation. Copies are being placed in the Library of the House, and will be sent to all those who responded.

The consultation responses will assist the ongoing work to develop and implement the new, funding arrangements. These will ensure that many thousands of people will get the cost-effective and high quality services they need, to live dignified and independent lives.

Greater London Authority Elections

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has decided to proceed in negotiations with any of the companies which expressed interest in providing electronic equipment for use in the Greater London Authority elections. [93063]

Mr. Raynsford: The London Mayor and Assembly elections on 4 May 2000—subject to Parliamentary approval—provide an excellent opportunity to introduce a more up-to-date system of counting of votes, more in keeping with modern technology and systems.

Following my announcement on 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 378; of our shortlist of potential suppliers of electronic equipment for the London Mayor and Assembly elections, we have been considering in more detail the equipment on offer from these suppliers. If the count for the London elections next year—which will comprise three ballots—is conducted in the traditional manual manner, it could take up to three days. That is why I am particularly pleased that three of the suppliers have offered electronic counting equipment. These machines have the capacity to scan many thousands of ballot papers an hour and so could reduce the count to a matter of hours. They are also more accurate than manual systems. We have therefore decided to proceed in negotiation with the three suppliers offering electronic counting equipment: Data & Research Services plc; Election Systems & Software Inc. with Unisys Ltd.; and Smurfit Ltd.

The final decision on whether to award a contract is likely to be made in September when the proposals have been fully evaluated. We will be looking for value for money, and we will need to be absolutely confident that the chosen method is accurate and efficient. All the equipment we are considering has been tried and tested in elections elsewhere.

River Tweed

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library the scientific advice received from English Nature concerning the notification of the River Tweed as a candidate special area of conservation under the European Council Directive 92/43/EEC on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild flora. [88617]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 28 June 1999]: With the agreement of the Scottish Executive, I have placed in the Library of the House a paper written by the Chief Scientist of Scottish Natural Heritage (English Nature's equivalent in Scotland) in 1995 setting out a scientific analysis of the case for proposal of the River Tweed as a Special Area of Conservation. That document is the best summary of the agency's advice. The Government and the statutory nature conservation agencies subsequently discussed the various scientific factors which had to be taken into account in making a decision about whether to propose the site to the European Commission as a candidate Special Area of Conservation.

The Government concluded that the River Tweed should not be proposed to the European Commission as a candidate Special Area of Conservation. The Government believed that there were a number of reasons why, applying the criteria for site selection specified in the Habitats Directive, the River Tweed was not an outstanding candidate for Special Area of Conservation status for Atlantic salmon. These included the relatively poor state of the spawning salmon stock, the very substantial modification by man of the watercourse, and discharges into the river environment. The Government have proposed five other rivers to the European Commission as candidate Special Areas of Conservation for salmon, which we believe better meet the selection criteria of the Habitats Directive.

The implementation of the Habitats Directive in Scotland is now a matter for the Scottish Parliament and Scottish Executive.

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the likely impact on (a) numbers of trains run and (b) passenger kilometres of the closure of (i) the Circle Line during summer 1999, (ii) part of the Northern Line during summer 1999, (iii) part of the Bakerloo Line during autumn 1999 and (iv) part of the Victoria Line during autumn 1999. [90850]

Mrs. Liddell: This is a matter for London Underground. However, I understand that the impact on the number of trains run will be as follows:

(i) The Circle Line has been suspended for essential safety work until 16 August 1999. Additional trains are operating on the Hammersmith and City Line and two extra trains on the District Line.

(ii) 12 fewer trains than normal are operating on the Northern Line during peak periods. There are four fewer trains than normal at the weekends. This is to allow for essential maintenance and upgrading.

(iii) No trains will run south of Victoria and there will be a reduced peak service on the rest of the line. The off-peak service north of Victoria will be as normal.

London Underground inform me they have not assessed the impact of these closures on passenger kilometres.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce women-only carriages on London Underground. [91494]

Mrs. Liddell: This Government takes the problem of crime on the underground very seriously and we are pleased to see that it has halved over the last decade.

Introducing women-only carriages would be a matter for London Underground. I understand that they are expanding their CCTV network, upgrading the system at stations and introducing cameras to trains and other crime prevention measures.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many extra District Line trains have run since the closure of parts of the Circle Line. [91088]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 14 July 1999]: This is a matter for London Underground, but I understand that, from 5 July 1999, London Underground have been operating two additional trains throughout the day on the District Line between Putney Bridge and Mansion House.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the average daily passenger figures for the Circle Line connecting (a) Tower Hill and Aldgate and (b) Gloucester Road and High Street Kensington over the last 12 months. [91051]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 14 July 1999]: This is a matter for London Underground. However, I understand that the average number of daily passenger journeys between these stations over the last 12 months was:

	Number
Gloucester Road to High Street Kensington	29,000
High Street Kensington to Gloucester Road	24,000
Total	53,000
Aldgate to Tower Hill	23,000
Tower Hill to Aldgate	21,000
Total	44,000

Circle Line services have been suspended to allow London Underground to complete the long overdue safety-related engineering works. Service disruption is always disappointing, but safety is, quite rightly, London Transport's top priority.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the level of provision of fire extinguishers on the London Underground. [91720]

Mrs. Liddell: London Underground operates under one of the toughest safety regimes of any underground metro system. Any changes to the provision of fire extinguishers on the underground are subject to the approval of Her Majesty's Rail Inspectorate.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total passenger capacity in either direction between Moorgate station and Kennington station of (a) Northern Line services between Monday 28 June and Friday 2 July and (b) Northern Line replacement bus services between Monday 5 July and Friday 9 July. [91518]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 July 1999]: This is an operational matter for London Underground. Figures are not available to compare alternative passenger services. However, I understand that while bus services between Moorgate and Kennington have been busy in peak periods, there is sufficient capacity available to cope with the demand. Additional buses are on standby, if necessary.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if temperature levels on tubes during Thursday 8 July exceeded Health and Safety Executive limits. [91526]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 July 1999]: This is a matter for London Underground. I understand that the Health and Safety Executive does not set temperature limits for the tube.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if works on the Circle Line are running according to timetable; and if full Circle Line services will resume on 16 August. [91520]

Mrs. Liddell: [holding answer 15 July 1999]: This is a matter for London Underground, but I understand works are running to timetable and that LU anticipate resuming a full Circle Line service on 16 August, as planned.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if works on the Northern Line are running according to timetable; and if full Northern Line Bank branch services will resume on 6 September. [91521]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 July 1999]: This is a matter for London Underground, but I understand works on the Northern Line are on schedule and services should resume on Monday 6 September, as planned.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people travelled in either direction between Moorgate station and Kennington station or intermediate stations using (a) Northern Line underground services between Monday 28 June and Friday 2 July and (b) Northern Line replacement bus services between Monday 5 July and Friday 9 July. [91519]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 July 1999]: This is an operational matter for London Underground. However, I understand that many of the passengers who would normally use this section of the Northern Line have access to underground services, including the 15 per cent. extra trains on the Northern Line Charing Cross branch.

Before the temporary closure, 75,000 journeys were made daily on the Northern Line between Moorgate and Kennington. In the first week after the closure, 10,000 people a day used the replacement and existing services along the route.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on air conditioning on London Underground trains; and if he will make a statement. [91523]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 July 1999]: This is a matter for London Underground, but I understand that air conditioning would not only be extremely expensive to install, but would cause severe operational constraints, particularly on the deep tube lines. However, LU are looking at various methods of cooling trains and tunnels, and this will include air conditioning where appropriate.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many complaints were received by London Underground on Thursday 8 July about excessive temperatures on tube trains; and if he will make a statement. [91525]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 July 1999]: This is a matter for London Underground. I understand that they received a total of 20 complaints about the high temperatures on tube trains on Thursday 8 July.

I appreciate passengers' frustration at the high temperatures that can occur on tube trains on very hot days and understand that London Underground are looking at ways of cooling trains and tunnels.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with London Underground regarding service (a) on the Piccadilly Line and (b) at Arnos Grove Station. [91444]

Mrs. Liddell: [holding answer 21 July 1999]: Piccadilly Line services are an operational matter for London Underground. However, my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London does meet with the managing director of LU every month, when they discuss tube services, including the Piccadilly Line.

Neither myself nor other Ministers have specifically discussed services at Arnos Grove with LU. However, I understand that LU have developed a scheme to reduce congestion at this station and are currently considering how best to take this forward.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on experiments in the genetic modification of plants so that honey from their nectar produces medicinally valuable products. [90721]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 13 July 1999]: I have received no applications for consent to release this type of genetically modified (GM) plant. Any such applications would be subject to a scientific assessment of risk carried out case-by-case on the basis of an environmental risk assessment. It is likely that any such experiments would be carried out in containment.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the maximum number of fields and the maximum field size that will be permitted in the farm scale trials of genetically modified oil seed rape, maize and sugar beet; and which body will determine these numbers and sizes. [91415]

Mr. Meale: The farm scale evaluations of the impact of the management of genetically modified (GM) herbicide tolerant oilseed rape and maize on farmland are being guided by an independent scientific steering committee. The steering committee will determine the number of fields necessary to ensure the statistical validity of the study. Preliminary analysis has indicated that 20 paired comparisons of each crop in each year will be sufficient, although more detailed analysis of the appropriate sample size was called for by the steering committee and it may be necessary to revise the number in the light of this.

In the current research programme, the intention is to carry out ecological studies in a realistic cropping scenario, that is within fields of a size representative of UK agricultural practices. A size of about 10 ha was chosen; in the case of maize, many fields are likely to be smaller—about 6–7 ha and, in the case of oilseed rape, fields may be larger than 10 ha.

Sugar beet is not being grown as part of the programme this year.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the farm scale test sites planned for autumn 1999 and the crops to be grown; if interim test results from earlier trials will be available before their planting; and if he will make a statement. [92095]

Mr. Meale: The release of genetically modified autumn sown oilseed rape will be carried out under a consent granted to AgrEvo. The legislation requires that the proposed sites are advertised in a local newspaper and that my Department discloses the locations on the public register. The sites for this autumn's releases have not yet been selected.

It is unlikely that interim results will be available before the autumn sown crops are planted. The ecological studies being carried out in the spring sown crops are still being gathered and will continue to be gathered after harvest. Analysis of the results will then be carried out and reviewed by the Scientific Steering Group at their next meeting in October. It is not considered necessary to have the results of the wildlife studies in the spring sown crops before sowing the autumn sown crops. The different sowing times influence the wildlife in a crop quite significantly and great care needs to be taken in the interpretation of the results in this respect.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to repeal United Kingdom rules on bus and coach drivers' hours and apply EU rules to all operations. [91490]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government said in the Transport White Paper that it would consult the industry on legislation to bring most of the operations subject to the UK rules on drivers' hours within the scope of the European Union rules.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to extend the Working Time Directive to the road transport sector. [91491]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The road transport sector is covered by two proposals on Working Time from the European Commission. The first (taken in the Social Affairs Council) amends the existing Directive to include all transport sectors except maritime. The Council has now reached political agreement on this proposal, but it is subject to the co-decision procedure with the European Parliament and therefore subject to final approval.

The second proposal introduces further specific provisions, aimed at the road transport sector, on the average and maximum weekly limits; rest periods; provisions on night working; and derogations. These proposals are currently under discussion in the Transport Council.

Buses

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many new bus registrations there were in England in (a) 1994, (b), 1995, (c), 1996, (d), 1997, (e) 1998 and (f) 1999 to date; [91394]

(2) how many bus service registrations have been rejected by the Traffic Commissioners in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [91416]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The figures for new bus registrations are as follows:

Financial year	Registrations in England and Wales [1]
1994–95	4,917
1995–96	4,493
1996–97	4,465
1997–98	4,302
1998–99	5,169

[1] Prior to 1 May 1999, when an all Wales Traffic Area was established, the only dat on new bus registrations readily available covers both England and Wales.

Note:

During the period from 1 April to 30 June 1999 there were 1,088 new registrations. In the 12 months to June 1999, three applications for new bus service registration had been rejected.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the total bus subsidy in England supports services operating in (a) metropolitan areas, (b) non-metropolitan areas and (c) Greater London. [91407]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are two elements of bus service subsidy: the support of services by local authorities from their own resources, for socially necessary services; and Fuel Duty Rebate (FDR), which is paid by central Government directly to the bus operators for the local bus services they operate. Figures for local authority support for 1997–98 (the latest year figures are currently available for) are:

	£ million	Percentage
Metropolitan areas	98	53
Non-metropolitan areas	86	47
Total	184	—

Subsidy for buses in Greater London is provided as part of the London Transport grant. In 1997–98 London Transport buses made a gross operating profit of £0.1 million.

The figure for FDR support in England in 1998–99 was £224.5 million. Statistics are not kept on the split of this total between services in metropolitan and non-metropolitan areas and Greater London.

A5 Nesscliffe Bypass

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the A5 Nesscliffe bypass, Shropshire, will be built; and if he will make a statement. [91540]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As we announced on 10 December 1998, Official Report, columns 251–53, work on the A5 Nesscliffe bypass will start in 2001–02.

The orders fixing the line of the road have been made and will be published on 5 August. The Compulsory Purchase Order will be made early next year. Procedures to acquire the land necessary to construct the scheme can then begin. Final confirmation of the precise start date will be subject to the satisfactory completion of the necessary contract process.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) of the new bus lanes created on (a) trunk roads and (b) non-trunk roads in England since 2 May 1997, how many were additional to existing carriageway lanes; and how many reduced the number of lanes available to other vehicles; [91522]

(2) how many new bus lanes have been created on (a) trunk roads and (b) non-trunk roads in England, since 2 May 1997. [91429]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 15 July 1999]: Since 2 May 1997, 14 new bus lanes have been created on trunk roads. Seven of these involved additional carriageway lanes and seven reduced the number of lanes available for other vehicles.

Non-trunk roads are the responsibility of the local highway authority. Information is not kept in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Road Noise

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department has issued in respect of the use of whisper concrete or asphalt for road construction and resurfacing projects in (a) rural areas and (b) urban areas; and if he will make a statement. [91913]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Peter Pike, dated 22 July 1999:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson, has asked me to reply to your recent question about guidance issued in respect of the use of whisper concrete or asphalt for road construction and resurfacing projects in either rural areas or in urban areas.

Guidance on the use of both whisper concrete and asphalt for use in trunk road construction and maintenance is contained in two separate publications. General guidance over surfacing alternatives is given in the Design Manual for Roads and Bridges, Volume 7, HD 36/99. While specifications for these materials is included in the Manual of Contract Documents, Volume 1 and 2. No distinction is made between their use in rural and urban areas as the choice of surfacing is based on the particular requirements for each road. Both documents are published and available in the House of Commons library.

If you require further information I suggest that you contact the Agency's Group Manager responsible for road surfacing, Graham Bowskill. He can be contacted on 0171 921 4746 and is familiar with both whisper concrete and asphalt road surfaces.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the impact of noise from motorways and high speed roads in (a) urban areas and (b) rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [91912]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have been well aware of concern about the level of traffic noise arising from motorways and other high speed roads. Our proposals for dealing with the problem arising from those roads for which the Secretary of State has responsibility were explained in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England". We announced the annual budget which was being ring-fenced for this purpose on 22 March 1999, Official Report, columns 50–51, together with criteria which would target the most serious and pressing cases.

The Highways Agency has assessed a number of locations where traffic noise had been a particular cause for concern against the sift criteria. The Agency will shortly be undertaking detailed studies of those locations meeting the criteria where there are no immediate plans to replace the existing road surface with a quieter one. The studies are necessary to discover the most appropriate means of dealing with the problem. There has been no differentiation between urban and rural areas, but the studies will take into account the proximity of housing to the road.

The Agency has also made good progress in the use of lower noise surfaces when maintenance is due on existing roads. Approximately three quarters of maintenance contracts undertaken since last year have used these new surfaces.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the guidance (a) he and (b) his Green Minister have issued concerning the introduction of low and nil emission fuel technology into the Department's vehicle fleet. [90693]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 19 July 1999]: My Department is committed to reducing the environmental impact of its own transport activities, through the implementation of green transport plans. One important aspect of our plan for DETR headquarters is to reduce business car use and its associated emissions to a minimum. My Department is producing guidance on greener vehicles and cleaner fuels to include in our "Green Guide for Buyers", which was distributed across government in February 1998. Both DETR's green transport plan for its headquarters and the buyers' guide can be found on the Internet at www.environment.detr.gov.uk.

Local Government Act 1988

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made with his plans to repeal section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement. [91986]

Mr. Meale: The Government have made a clear commitment to repeal section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988, and plan to do so as soon as Parliamentary time permits.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many appointments to quangos he made between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. [92043]

Mr. Meale: The Secretary of State has made the following appointments to NDPBs, nationalised industries and public corporations sponsored by the Department:

	1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998	1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999
NDPBs:
Executive	71	207
Advisory	75	110
Tribunals	132	207
Nationalised Industries	3	9
Public Corporation	3	5
Total	284	538

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many members of Britain's (a) ethnic minority communities and (b) Asian community he appointed to quangos between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. [92114]

Mr. Meale: The Secretary of State has appointed the following ethnic minority candidates to NDPBs, nationalised industries and public corporations sponsored by the Department:

	1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998	1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999
Asian Community	7	15
Other ethnic minorities	10	13
Totals	17	28

Full details of the Department's plan on equal opportunities are contained in "Quangos, Opening Up Public Appointments 1999–2002", published by the Government on 25 May 1999, a copy of which is deposited in the Libraries of both Houses. This sets out our goals and objectives for improving representation of women, people from ethnic minority groups and people with disabilities.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92179]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

English Partnerships

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the budget for English Partnerships in the North West of England in each year since 1994; and what are the proposed budgets for the next three years. [91462]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 21 July 1999]: English Partnerships' budget for the North West from 1994 to 1999 was as follows:

£ million

Year	Administration and running costs	Land and Property Programme	Total
1994–95	n/a	49.5	49.5
1995–96	5.1	51.1	56.2
1996–97	6.1	49.8	55.9
1997–98	6.3	78.1	84.4
1998–99	6.2	95.0	101.2

The proposed land and property programme for the North West for the next three years is as follows. The administration costs have been subsumed within those for the North West Development Agency (NWDA).

£ million

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Land and Property Programme	79.8	82.0	64.0
Total NWDA administration budget, including for the land and property programme	12.1	11.9	11.9

Driving Tests

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many non-United Kingdom passport holders have made an application to take a UK driving test in each of the last five years. [92024]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 July 1999]: We do not collect those data.

Songbirds

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make representations to the French Government about its extensions to the season for shooting songbirds. [92414]

Mr. Meale: The measures member states should take to protect wild birds, including the extent of hunting seasons, are laid out in the EC Directive on the Conservation of Wild Birds (79/409/EEC). It is the responsibility of the European Commission to ensure that member states comply with the provisions of EC Directives, and my Department supports the Commission in this aim.

Waste Incineration

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the proportion of municipal waste incinerated with energy/heat recovery in each of the past 10 years; and what targets he has set for the next 10 years. [92075]

Mr. Meale: Reliable surveys of municipal waste arisings, and the management options selected for those wastes, have been conducted since 1995–96. The figures for the quantities of municipal waste incinerated are as follows:

Percentage

Waste management option	1995–96	1996–97	1996–98
Incineration with energy recovery	5	5	6
Incineration without energy recovery	4	3	0.2

The Government published their draft waste strategy for England and Wales, "A Way With Waste", on 30 June 1999. Within the draft strategy, the following targets and goals are identified:

- to recover 45 per cent. of municipal waste by 2010 (with a target of 40 per cent. recovery by 2005);
- to recycle or compost 30 per cent. of household waste by 2010 (with a target of recycling or composting 25 per cent. of household waste as soon as possible).

A511 Bypass

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the prospects for the completion of the A511 bypass around Ashby-de-la-Zouch. [92077]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Leicestershire County Council, along with all other local highway authorities, will be submitting its Local Transport Plan (LTP) by the end of July. If the bypass is included in the Council's LTP, my Department will very carefully consider the case for it against competing bids for major new schemes and other areas of expenditure. The announcement of the local transport settlement is due to be made shortly before Christmas.

A6 Bypass

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the prospects for an A6 bypass around Kegworth, Leicestershire. [92078]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The proposal for an A6 Kegworth bypass is to be considered as part of the Multi-Modal Study looking at North-South movements in the East Midlands which came about as part of the Roads Review. The study is due to start in the autumn and will take approximately two years to complete.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the levels of vehicle excise duty are for 40 tonne lorries in other EU countries in 1999–2000. [91117]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government do not hold this information. However, the Department has recently commissioned research on lorry VED rates for the EC member states.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members. [92448]

Mr. Meale: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Hong Kong

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to publish the fifth of the reports to Parliament on Hong Kong and the implementation of the Joint Declaration. [93022]

Mr. Hoon: The fifth report in this series, covering the period January-June 1999, was published today and a copy of the report has been placed in the Library. The report includes a foreword written by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary. I commend the report to the House.

Human Rights

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to publish the Annual Report on Human Rights. [93023]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The second Annual Report on Human Rights has been laid before the House as Command Paper 4404 today. Copies of the Report have also been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Greece (Military Agreements)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Greek Government on their military agreement with Armenia and Iran. [90433]

Ms Quin: None. The recent tripartite talks between Greece, Iran and Armenia form part of an on-going dialogue begun in 1995, focusing on co-operation in the energy, tourism, industry and communications sectors. There is no defence co-operation agreement.

Kosovar Albanians

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the number of Kosovar Albanians imprisoned in Serbia; and if he will make a statement. [91230]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There have been unconfirmed reports of up to 5,000 people from Kosovo detained in Serbia. The ICRC has a list of around 2,000, and has visited over 300 prisoners in the past few days. I hope that Belgrade will co-operate fully with the ICRC and that any prisoners not legitimately held can be released immediately.

Ocalan Trial

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government have made of the conduct of the Ocalan trial, with particular reference to international standards; and if he will make a statement. [91907]

Ms Quin: We are aware of the observations of 21 June by members of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly that the conduct of the trial was correct and in accordance with the applicable Turkish law. We are also aware of the concerns raised by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights with regard to the treatment of Mr. Ocalan's lawyers. We understand that an appeal is now pending. It is in the first place for the Appeal Court to review the outcome of the trial. We will continue to monitor closely the appeal proceedings.

We have made clear to the Turkish authorities the importance we attach to all proceedings being transparent and conducted in accordance with due process. We have also reiterated on numerous occasions our opposition as a matter of principle to the use of the death penalty.

Visitor Entry Clearance

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy in considering applications for visitor entry clearance where the applicant wishes to visit the United Kingdom for a family wedding, as a guest, on a particular date; and in what percentage of such applications in the past 12 months the entry clearance officer in Islamabad has offered an interview date after the date of the wedding. [92274]

Mr. Hoon: Every effort is made to offer an appointment at the earliest convenient opportunity. At peak periods for travel, waiting times may extend to three or four weeks. Since most visit visa applicants plan to travel on specific dates, it is only where there are compelling compassionate circumstances that interview appointments can be brought forward ahead of others who are waiting. For this reason we encourage travellers to apply for their visas well ahead of their intended date of travel.

Separate statistics are not held on the purpose of proposed visits and the number of applicants offered an interview date after the date of a particular event cannot therefore be established.

East Timor

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will institute a judicial inquiry into the deaths of two British newsmen on 16 October 1975 in Balibo, East Timor; and if he will make a statement. [92703]

Mr. Hoon: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received as to the events in Balibo, East Timor on 16 October 1975; and if he will make a statement. [92704]

Mr. Hoon: We have received a number of letters from Members of Parliament, NGOs and the relatives of the two British journalists killed at Balibo in 1975. We keep in regular contact with the relatives and I have recently written to them.

Iran

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government have made of the human rights situation of the Bahá'i Community in Iran; what recent discussions he has held with the Iranian regime on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [92186]

Mr. Hoon: Iran is aware of our serious concern about the Bahá'is. Persecution of individuals on religious grounds is totally unacceptable. The EU-sponsored United Nations Commission on Human Rights resolution on Iran adopted on 23 April reaffirmed international concern about their situation. We regularly raise with the Iranian authorities our concerns about the Bahá'i community. I personally did so with the Iranian Ambassador on 24 May.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92455]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Visas (Documentation)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason people making visa applications on behalf of relatives living in India for entry to the United Kingdom are required to submit original documents rather than photocopies; and if he will make a statement. [92211]

Mr. Hoon: We prefer sponsors of visa applicants worldwide, not only from India, to submit documents in original form rather than photocopied because it is easier for entry clearance staff to establish their authenticity. It also saves the sponsor the time and expense of having photocopies made and notarised.

Immigration Office, Islamabad

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Lorna Fitzsimons) 14 July 1999, Official Report, column 254, if he will explain why the relatives of Mr. Chugtai, a constituent, Mrs. Nighat Yasmin and Mrs. Rehana Ghaffar, were asked to report to the post in Islamabad for an interview 25 working days after lodging the application for visit visas; and if he will make a statement. [92359]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Burton (Mrs. Dean) on 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 144. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will be writing shortly about the specific case raised by the hon. Member.

CABINET OFFICE

The Buying Agency

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if the quinquennial review of The Buying Agency has been completed; and if the completed quinquennial review report will be made public. [91256]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Quinquennial Review of The Buying Agency, which I announced on 29 October 1998, has now been completed. Cabinet Office, with the help of its consultants PricewaterhouseCoopers, has considered the performance of the Agency over the last five years and the options for the future of its function in the context of the Government's policy on civil procurement.

TBA's main aims are to increase the volume of goods and services procured and to generate a return on capital employed through its Trading Fund. An evaluation of its performance over the five year period 1994–98 showed that over the first four years sales and income performance had been disappointing, due mainly to a substantial change in the Agency's market. Over the period as a whole, TBA met six of its thirteen financial targets, three of nine efficiency and productivity targets, six out of ten customer satisfaction targets and all nine targets for measures of internal quality and environmental management. The evaluation concluded that better measures and targets were needed to assess the efficiency and added value of the Agency's work.

A review of prior options rejected abolition and privatisation which would deprive government of an instrument for central procurement. The consultants considered that TBA's purchasing and energy procurement services have sufficient potential to justify retention of the whole Agency and therefore recommended that its agency status should continue subject to certain changes in business practice. The Review also concluded that the merger of TBA's functions with another department or agency was a matter for the review of civil procurement being conducted by Peter Gershon.

Having considered the recommendations of the Review, I have decided that TBA should remain as an executive agency following the satisfactory completion of a comprehensive programme of short term business improvements aimed at developing its relationships with customers and suppliers and demonstrating the savings obtainable from its central purchasing. From 1 January 2000, it will become an executive agency of the new Office of Government Commerce on which my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury is making a separate statement.

I am placing a summary of the consultants' report on prior options in the Libraries of the House.

Departments (Public Access)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what measures he is taking to make Government Departments more accessible to schools and members of the public, with particular reference to open days. [90890]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Each Government Department is responsible for its own policy on open days. Information on all aspects of the works of the Department is accessible through the Cabinet Office website. The Cabinet Office also participates in the London "Open House" weekend each September and offers work experience placements to children in secondary education.

Red Boxes

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the rules concerning the carriage of ministerial red boxes by public transport. [91492]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Ministerial red boxes generally contain official papers or other material which may be sensitive or valuable and due care, therefore, needs to be given to their transportation. Where it is necessary to carry red boxes by public transport, they should be effectively disguised.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) how many appointments to quangos he made between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; [92044]

(2) how many members of Britain's (a) ethnic minority communities and (b) Asian community he appointed to quangos between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. [92115]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The public bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible as Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster are: the Advisory Committee on Advertising; the Advisory Committee for Justice of the Peace in Lancashire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside; the Better Regulation Task Force; and the Civil Service Appeal Board.

The details of appointments made are given in the table. However, while appointments have been made from members of ethnic minority groups, I am unable to disclose the numbers, as to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent.

	June 1997 to May 1998	June 1998 to May 1999
Advisory Committee on JPs	39	23
Advisory Committee on Advertising	0	6
Better Regulation Task Force	16	2
Civil Service Appeal Board	9	12

The Government have made some progress in increasing representation of women, members of ethnic minority groups and of people with disabilities. Full departmental plans on equal opportunities were published by the Government on 25 May 1999 and deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Departmental Performance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the performance of the main departments and agencies against the six service standards for central Government over the last financial year. [92879]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I have arranged for a report on the performance of the main Departments and agencies to be placed in the Libraries of the House. This is the second report on performance against the six service standards and reflects our continuing commitment to openness and to reporting transparently on our performance.

The report shows that, in many cases, performance in responding to correspondence from the public has improved over the past year. There have been some exceptional performances, although there have also been some disappointing results. Overall, there is still room for improvement, and all Departments and agencies are striving to do better this year. The performance of the main Departments and agencies is summarised in the table.

Against the other standards, the report shows that users with pre-arranged meetings are usually seen within 10 minutes of their appointment, that all Departments have at least one telephone inquiry point, and that all Departments now have complaints procedures in place covering all their services. The report also shows some of the innovative ways in which Departments and agencies are consulting their users and making their services more accessible.

The Modernising Government White Paper announced some changes to the standards for this financial year, in particular the introduction on 1 October 1999 of new standards covering the length of time users should wait to be seen in public offices, the setting up of e-mail inquiry points, and how long users of telephone inquiry points should have to wait before their calls are answered.

[1] This figure represents complaints only.
[2] The Employment Service measures performance by asking an independent research company to sample 4,000 letters. The Chief Executive's Office received 657 letters and replied to 96 per cent. within a 15-day target (against a target of 95 per cent.).
[3] Includes NIO Core, Forensic Science Agency, and Compensation Agency. Performance is calculated by a mixture of 100 per cent. monitoring and sampling.
[4] Performance measured in two sampling periods.
[5] Performance measured by sampling.
[6] These figures represent correspondence received in the county courts only and exclude correspondence received at the Crown Court, High Court, Tribunals and Probate Offices.
[7] All Ministerial Cases (MCs) are monitored, others are measured by sampling. Have now introduced a 15-day target for all correspondence.
[8] Sample of 2,400 used to measure performance.
[9] Chief Executive correspondence: 808 letters replied to, 97.7 per cent. within 20-days target. Private Office, PCA and Official Correspondence: 2,296 items replied to, 97.9 per cent. in 10-day target. These figures based on 100 per cent. monitoring. General correspondence monitored by monthly sample
[10] Composite figures for all regional offices.
[11] Total correspondence received is the number of items of post received by the Department's network of offices and includes internal mail. Performance is measured by monthly sampling and holding replies are not counted as having met the standard.
[12] HM Treasury introduced a system to monitor correspondence in April this year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

R v. Doran Case

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement concerning the judge's ruling in the case of R-v-Doran and others to stay proceedings as an abuse of process; and what action he will take as a result. [93018]

The Attorney-General: The Paymaster General and I have today agreed that an independent inquiry should be commissioned into the actions of HM Customs and Excise officials and counsel who appeared on behalf of the Prosecution at the abuse of process hearing and at the preceding first and second trials of that case. The inquiry will report to me and the Chairman of Customs and Excise and will have the following terms of reference.

"Having regard to the matters set out by The hon. Mr. Justice Turner in his ruling of 6 July 1999 to stay proceedings in the case of R v. Doran and Others as an abuse of process, to examine the actions of HM Customs and Excise officials and Counsel who appeared on behalf of the Prosecution at that hearing and at the first and second trials of that case, in particular in relation to:

(1) technical surveillance conducted at hotels S, L and R, and in particular whether permission was granted by those hotels for that surveillance, and whether the surveillance was properly authorised;

(2) the non-disclosure of material relating to those issues, and the related public interest immunity applications made in the course of proceedings;

(3) the evidence given at the trials in relation to those issues;

(4) what was said by Counsel in open court in relation to those issues;

(5) the approach, and the circumstances leading to that approach, taken by Counsel to the abuse hearing before Mr. Justice Turner, and in particular their advice on the hotel issues and on whether additional witness statements should be taken in relation to the surveillance;

(6) the circumstances which led to the decision to abort the first trial.

and to make recommendations"

His Honour Gerald Butler QC has been asked to conduct that inquiry and he will report within six months.

A summary of the report and its recommendations will be made available to the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92441]

The Attorney-General: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to in the timescale specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [92001]

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her today by my noble Friend the Minister for Women.

As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Departments are working with the Women's Unit to develop good practices for carrying out gender impact assessments of their policies.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Under-18s)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the UK armed forces currently serving as part of the NATO peacekeeping force in Kosovo are under 18 years of age. [87702]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 22 June 1999]: As at 15 June 1999, there were eight Naval Service personnel under 18 years of age serving on ships in the Kosovo region.

As at 1 May 1999, there were 22 Army personnel under 18 years of age deployed in the Former Yugoslavia.

As at 15 June 1999, no RAF personnel under age 18 were deployed in the Kosovo area.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many members of the British contribution to SFOR were under 18 years of age on 23 June; and in which units; [89040]

(2) how many members of the British contribution to KFOR were under 18 years of age on 23 June; and in which units; [89042]

(3) how many members of (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the RAF and (c) the Army committed to operations in the South Eastern Europe theatre were under 18 years of age on 23 June. [89043]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 30 June 1999]: Information is not available in precisely the detail requested: data on Naval Service personnel show the numbers on ships in the Adriatic; data on Army personnel show the numbers in theatre "former Yugoslavia"; data on RAF personnel show the numbers by country.

As at 15 June 1999, there were 8 Naval Service personnel under 18 years of age serving on ships in the Adriatic.

As at 1 June 1999, there were 17 Army personnel under 18 years of age deployed in the former Yugoslavia.

As at 14 June 1999, no RAF personnel under age 18 were deployed in the former Yugoslavia.

Premature Voluntary Retirement

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have (a) applied for and (b) been granted (i) premature voluntary retirement and (ii) purchase of their discharge, for each of the three services by rank and by length of service in each of the last five years. [91135]

Mr. Doug Henderson: All applications for Premature Voluntary Retirement by eligible Naval Service and RAF Officers are granted. Not all applications for Premature Voluntary Retirement by Army Officers are granted, but only figures for the number of applications granted are available centrally.

All applications for Premature Voluntary Retirement by eligible Other Ranks in all three Services are granted.

I am placing details of the number of Premature Voluntary Retirements from the Armed Forces over the last five years in the Library of the House. This information is available by rank but not by length of service. Details of Premature Voluntary Retirements by Army Officers are not available for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. The figures provided do not include Gurkhas, Royal Irish (Home Service) personnel, Locally Employed Personnel, Reservists mobilised for duties associated with Bosnia, and Full Time Reserve Service personnel.

Officers from all three Services are no longer required to purchase their discharge. Similarly, the Naval Service and the RAF no longer require Other Ranks to purchase their discharge. Only Army Other Ranks who enlisted on Notice Engagement prior to 1 January 1991 can apply to purchase their discharge, and details of those who have done so are not held centrally.

Land Command

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Commander-in-Chief Land's paper, "Building a Career of First Choice"; and if he will make a statement; [91568]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Land Command paper on district restructuring reference number Land G3 (O and D) 3031/12, dated 9 July. [92021]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The paper requested is a classified document including opinion and advice about proposed establishments for Army headquarters. The document was produced to inform internal discussion and advice and so I am withholding it under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Ministry of Defence Police Agency

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the MOD Police Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. [92082]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following Key Targets have been set for the Ministry of Defence Police Agency.

To achieve 38 per cent. MDP patrol activity from those officers devoted to patrolling.

To achieve a compliance rate 5 per cent. above the average Home Department Police Force compliance rate set for the submission of Crown Prosecution Service files.

To achieve at least a 38 per cent. solving rate against all reported crime.

To maintain at least a 90 per cent. satisfaction rate from victims of crime in the service provided by the MDP.

By 31 March 2000 to develop and implement a corporate index of efficiency that will then form the baseline for year on year improvements.

To increase to 95 per cent. the customer satisfaction rate with the service provided by Area Policing Teams.

To monitor the scale and incidence of crime within the Defence Estate, and relate this to the pattern of MDP deployment and activity in order to develop an analysis of trends to inform the setting of targets and the matching of resources to needs in future years.

To recruit 15 per cent. of women and 1.5 per cent. of ethnic minorities within overall MDP recruitment; and to deliver by 31 December an action plan on the Forces' response to the Macpherson Report, including the recruitment and retention of officers from ethnic minorities.

Army Retention Study

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the terms of reference are for the Adjutant-General's Army Retention Study; and when it will be completed. [91590]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 19 July 1999]: The Army's Retention Study is a 6 month strategic review to examine the effectiveness of present policies, which will include carrying out field research, and making recommendations for any improvements. The study is being carried out by Hay Management Group and the Institute for Employment Studies. The work is scheduled to be complete by 30 November 1999.

Defence Logistics Organisations

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the location of the permanent headquarters of the Defence Logistics Organisation. [93064]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As I announced on 5 May, we have decided to base the headquarters of the Defence Logistics Organisation (DLO) at Ensleigh in Bath, subject to consultation with the Trades Unions. We have now completed this period of formal consultation. Having fully considered the Trades Unions' representations, which included no major objections, I have decided that the collocation proposal should proceed. The permanent headquarters will therefore, be based at Ensleigh with a progressive move to be completed by 1 April 2000. The headquarters will be small and strategic and the vast majority of the DLO's staff will not be directly affected. The Trades Unions will continue to be continue to be consulted during the implementation of the transition to the new headquarters.

The chosen location is the best site to enable the Chief of Defence Ligistics to achieve real long-term gains through the business improvements in acquisition management and logistic support which his organisation will help to drive forward.

Departmental Education and Training

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to ensure the effectiveness of education and training for individuals in his Department. [93152]

Mr. George Robertson: We made clear in the Strategic Defence Review the importance that we attach to education and training for all those who work in the Ministry of Defence, in line with our policy for people and the Government's commitment to lifelong learning and education.

Education and training must be tailored to meet operational and organisation needs and delivered to the right people, at the right time and in the most cost-effective manner.

With this in mind, I am ordering a wide-ranging, fundamental study of education and individual training in my Department. It will commence in September 1999 and is likely to take 18 months to complete. The aim will be to consider how education and training can most effectively meet the Department's requirements for timeliness, quality, value for money, doctrine and operational effectiveness, until at least the year 2010.

This study will involve both the Armed Forces and civilians in the Department. It will seek opportunities for further joint Service education and training and greater synergy between education and training provided for Service and civilian personnel. It will also take into account best commercial practice.

The first phase will be a scoping study lasting approximately 6 months. It will be headed by Mr. David Fisher. This will lead into the main study which will last for approximately 12 months and be headed by Rear Admiral Jonathan Band in the rank of Vice Admiral.

I am placing a copy of the terms of reference for the scoping study in the Library of the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92449]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost in each of the last five years of his Department's search and rescue capability in the UK. [80713]

Mr. Doug Henderson [pursuant to his reply, 16 April 1999, c. 371]: I regret to inform the hon. Member that the answer I gave was incorrect. The net cost of Search and Rescue (SAR) to my Department in the last five years is as follows:

Year	£ million
1995–96	47.349
1996–97	49.394
1997–98	51.683
1998–99	52.444

Figures are not readily available for financial year 1994–95, although they are not expected to differ substantially from 1995–96 (appropriately reduced to take account of inflation). The figures include the cost of spares, personnel, fuel and other support costs for all primary SAR assets, that is, RAF SAR helicopters, the RAF Mountain Rescue Service and the Aeronautical Rescue Co-ordination Centre. However, figures for assets that perform SAR as part of their wider duties, such as RN helicopters and the RAF Nimrod, cannot be readily identified and are not included.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997 stating in each case whether or not the results were published. [89690]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 5 July 1999]: The Government are committed to consulting and involving the public to help inform both policy formulation and the delivery of better quality public services. Responsive public services are an important part of the Modernising Government initiative.

My Department, Agency and sponsored bodies conduct/commission market or opinion research only when it is justified by the needs of the policy or programme and do so in the most economical, efficient and effective way to achieve the purpose.

Details of the individual pieces of market or opinion research have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

BBC Internet Service

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from the BBC regarding the provision of a free BBC internet access service; and if he will make a statement. [91432]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 July 1999]: I have received no representations from the BBC on the provision of a BBC internet access service. The BBC has, however, explained that BBC Worldwide has reached agreement with Scottish Power Telecommunications for the supply of services, including internet connectivity, other internet based services, and a telephone support service. The service supplied by Scottish Power Telecommunications will be provided to the public by BBC Worldwide under its own brands. I have been assured that this is a wholly commercial arrangement with no licence fee funding and that the BBC's commercial policy and fair trading guidelines will apply in full.

Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, indicating when they were disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if he will indicate in (c)(ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies his Department currently is responsible for. [90672]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 July 1999]: The Government are committed to keeping the number of NDPBs to a minimum and to ensuring that those which remain are open, accountable and effective. Many of the new NDPBs established since 1 May 1997 are essential in helping the Government deliver their Manifesto commitments.

As a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review, the Department announced a streamlining of the delivery mechanisms which will result in the restructuring of certain bodies my Department sponsors including in the areas of film, architecture and museums, libraries and archives. This restructuring is currently taking place, although some aspects are subject to legislation.

The answer is as follows:

(a) None (but see (c)(i))

(b) Library and Information Commission

The Commission for Architecture and the Built Environment will be established during 1999–2000 taking on the functions of the Royal Fine Art Commission.

The Film Council will be established during 1999–2000 taking on some of the functions of the British Film Institute. The British Film Institute will cease to be directly sponsored by my Department with effect from 1 April 2000.

(v) National Lottery Commission (formerly the Office of the Director of the National Lottery).

My Department is responsible for 53 public bodies which includes executive and advisory NDPBs and public corporations.

[1] The Treasure Trove Reviewing Committee was reconstituted as the Treasure Valuation Committee in September as a result of the Treasure Act 1996.

[2] Millennium Central Ltd. was reconstituted as the New Millennium Experience Company following the review of the Millennium Dome Project by the Government during May and June 1997.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92138]

Mr. Chris Smith: The information is noted on the following table, which includes all appointments which fall under my responsibility or where my role is to advise my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and, through him, Her Majesty The Queen. Where numbers of public appointees in any category are less than five, Government policy on disclosure of the ethnic origin is not to provide this data to avoid the risk of identifying individuals without their consent.

	Total	Asian	All ethnic minorities
1 June 1997–31 May 1998
DCMS + HMQ	[1]101	Not disclosed	5(4.9%)
1 June 1998–31 May 1999
DCMS + HMQ	[2]158	5(3.1%)	7(4.4%)

[1] Asian includes Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi and Chinese

[2] Includes 13 appointments where information on ethnic background is not known or where appointees have declined to disclose this information

[3] Includes 21 appointments where information on ethnic background is not known or where appointees have declined to disclose this information

My Department has published an action plan on equal opportunities in Quangos—Opening up Public Appointments 1999–2002, which was published by the Government on 25 May 1999 and deposited in the Libraries of both Houses. The action plan sets out DCMS objectives and targets for improving representation of women, people from ethnic minority groups and from people with disabilities.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92183]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Football World Cup

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his latest estimate of the cost to public funds of the campaign to bring the 2006 Football World Cup to the United Kingdom. [91225]

Mr. Banks: The Football Association advise that, up to the end of 1998, they have spent £3,053,522 on the 2006 World Cup bid, of which £1,328,404 has been provided by Sport England's Lottery Sports Fund. The total budget for the 2006 campaign is some £9.4 million.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92444]

Mr. Chris Smith: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

CCTV

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 11 June 1999, Official Report, column 434, on CCTV, which cameras, other than CCTV ones, have been granted type approval for providing evidence in speeding cases; and what assessment he has made of their reliability. [91758]

Mr. Boateng: Before type approval is granted to a speed enforcement camera under section 20 of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988, it is subject to testing to assess its accuracy and reliability. This involves testing by the police and by an independent laboratory against standards set by the Police Scientific Development Branch. Only equipment which meets such standards is granted type approval. All type-approved equipment for speed enforcement is calibrated annually and police procedures for dealing with evidence from cameras provide for further checks on the accuracy and reliability of the equipment.

The speed cameras that have been granted type approval are:

Gatsometer BV

Serco Speed Enforcement System

Truvelo Combi S

Truvelo Combi S-mc

Speed Violation Detection Deterrent (SVDD)

Traffiphot "S"

Autovision 2

Autovision 3

Lastec

LaserCam.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91887]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

Since then, the number of people recruited to the Home Office under the New Deal for Young People has increased to five (of whom three were 18–24 years and two were 25 or over).

Handguns Amnesty

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with members of the Association of Chief Police Officers concerning a future amnesty for owners of illegally held handguns. [91929]

Kate Hoey: The Home Office is in regular contact with the Association of Chief Police Officers on a range of firearms matters. The need for a national amnesty for the owners of illegally held handguns is being assessed as part of a general amnesty for all firearms. No firm decision has yet been taken regarding timing. In the meantime, the Government will respond sympathetically to any calls from the police for local amnesties where there is a high level of community and public support.

Keith Birchall

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons it took from January 1998 to June 1999 to decide whether Keith Birchall should be granted compensation. [91826]

Kate Hoey: Mr. Birchall's application for compensation for a wrongful conviction was made on 20 February 1998. In October 1997, a review had begun of the interpretation of section 133(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, which provides that compensation shall be paid where a conviction has been > "reversed . . . on the ground that a new or newly discovered fact shows beyond reasonable doubt that there has been a miscarriage of justice".

This review involved obtaining legal advice, consultation with other Departments and Ministers, and internal consideration. Mr. Birchall's application was one of a number that could not be determined until the review was concluded in April 1999; I am sorry that it took so long to do so.

Justice and Victims Unit

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are currently working in the Justice and Victims Unit; and what are their responsibilities. [91825]

Mr. Boateng: There are currently 28 staff in the Justice and Victims Unit of the Home Office. Their responsibilities are:

A. Victims Issues, including compensation

1. Court Compensation orders
2. Review and oversight of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme
3. Victims Charter
4. Victims of crime policy issues
5. Administration of grant to 'Victim Support'
6. Witness support services in the Crown and Magistrates courts
7. Administration of grant to 'Support After Murder and Manslaughter'

B. Miscarriages of Justice

1. Oversight of the Criminal Cases Review Commission
2. Policy and case work relating to:
   a. Compensation for wrongful conviction or charge
   b. The exercise of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy
3. Casework relating to alleged wrongful conviction in the Channel Islands and Isle of Man

C. Prosecution policy; reducing delay in the criminal justice system; procedure in the magistrates courts

1. Policy issues relating to the relationship between the police, Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) and the courts, and Home Office interest in the reform of the CPS
2. Reducing delay in the criminal justice system:
   a. Narey measures, including new indictable-only procedures;
   b. Time limits on criminal proceedings
3. Bail in criminal proceedings
4. Policy on police cautioning of adult offenders
5. Policy on criminal procedures in magistrates courts (adults)
6. Criminal legal aid (Home Office interest)

1. Trials Issues Group
2. Joint Performance Management
3. Police Prosecution File Standards
4. National Register of Public Service Interpreters (Home Office interest).

Criminal Justice Act 1988

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the recent review of section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988. [91828]

Kate Hoey: This review was conducted by means of communications between Ministers and officials of various Departments, and legal advice to Ministers. The Code of Practice on Access to Government Information indicates that such internal discussion and advice is exempt from the commitment to provide information in that Code. The review did not lead to any change of policy or practice.

Miscarriages of Justice (Compensation)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many wrongfully convicted people, excluding motoring or summary offences, have been granted compensation since 1990; and what is the average time taken to process a claim. [91827]

Kate Hoey: There have been 154 successful applications for compensation for wrongful conviction or charge, under the statutory or the ex-gratia schemes, since 1990. (This figure excludes a large group of successful applications stemming from the quashing of a high number of convictions for drink-driving in Greater Manchester, between 1987 and 1989, but not any other motoring or summary offences.) The average time from the date of these applications to the decision to pay compensation is 210 days. Once such a decision has been taken, the time taken to make the final payment of compensation depends primarily on how quickly the successful applicant submits the full details of the claim (to allow the independent assessor to determine quantum) and accepts the subsequent award. The average time from the date of those successful applications since 1990 in respect of which a final payment has been made, to the final payment, is 895 days.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department following the Bentley case, what assessment he has made of the benefits of granting compensation where miscarriage of justice has been caused by judicial error. [91797]

Kate Hoey: It is my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's policy to pay compensation for a wrongful conviction caused by judicial error, under the ex-gratia arrangements announced by the then Home Secretary (Mr. Hurd) in his reply to Mr. Tim Smith on 29 November 1985, Official Report, columns 689–90, in cases where the judicial error is of an exceptional nature. The Divisional Court in the case of R v. Home Secretary ex parte Garner & Others held that it would be "a very rare case indeed" where the judicial misconduct is of the exceptional nature required to justify an ex-gratia payment.

Special Services (Costs)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes are proposed in the charging policy for the policing of football matches for the 1999–2000 season; how those charges are assessed; and if he will make a statement. [91915]

Kate Hoey: It is for chief constables to decide when to charge for special services such as the policing of football matches. The scale of charges is determined by the police authority. Under Home Office guidelines, the level of charges should represent the full economic cost of providing the special service.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes are proposed in policing costs for road closures for sporting and public events; and if he will make a statement. [91916]

Kate Hoey: I understand that the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) has issued guidance that the current practice by police forces of using their powers to achieve road closures during sporting events, such as football matches and other public events, is inappropriate. The ACPO advice is that, for planned events, it would be more appropriate for the organisers to apply to the relevant local authority for a road closure order. The fees and charges involved would be a matter for the local authority to determine.

Trial by Jury

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the percentage of cases where election is made for trial by jury and the defendant changes the plea to guilty prior to the start of the trial. [91914]

Mr. Boateng: Crown Prosecution Service statistics for 1998 show that 18,500 defendants elected trial in 1998 in addition to 47,185 either-way cases directed to the Crown Court by magistrates. During the same period, 76 per cent. of defendants in either-way cases pleaded guilty before the commencement of the Crown Court trial.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial savings are projected as a result of the proposed changes in the right to trial by jury. [92130]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not currently available. Detailed estimates of the costs and savings of the proposed procedure are still under consideration.

Forum on Animal Experiments

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is proposing as a follow-up to the Forum on Animal Experiments held on 11 July (a) to reduce the number of animals used in experimentation and (b) to co-ordinate research on alternatives to animal experimentation. [91918]

Mr. George Howarth: For the reasons I outlined in my reply to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 11 May 1998, Official Report, column 51, the total number of scientific procedures involving animals is not a true measure of the effectiveness of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The total number of procedures is dependent on a number of factors, including the implications of scientific breakthroughs and the buoyancy of United Kingdom industry.

We will, however, continue to work to minimise the amount of suffering caused and the number of animals used by ensuring that alternatives (which replace animal use, reduce the number of animals needed for a particular purpose and refine protocols to lessen suffering—the 3Rs) are used wherever possible.

Following the Forum I hosted on 9 July, I am keen to see whether it might be possible to co-ordinate more effectively the various programmes of work aimed at developing, testing or validating alternatives. I have already written to a number of colleagues in other Departments to obtain information on their funding of such work and have asked officials to write over the summer to other bodies that sponsor, commission or undertake such work, including charities, animal welfare bodies and industry. I will also be asking the Animal Procedures Committee for advice on this matter.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further meetings he is planning with animal welfare organisations, research organisations and others with an interest in animal experimentation as a follow-up to the Forum on Animal Experiments held on 11 July. [91917]

Mr. George Howarth: In the last 12 months, I have met with a number of such organisations and I have visited a number of establishments designated under the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. I expect to continue to do so. I do, as far as possible, maintain an "open door" policy and generally find meetings with all those with an interest in the use of animals in scientific procedures to be very useful and constructive.

I am currently giving consideration to the possibility of holding further events, similar to the Forum, but have no firm plans at this stage.

Police Officers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to prevent early retirement by police officers under investigation by the Police Complaints Authority. [91836]

Kate Hoey: Retirement cannot take place where a police officer is suspended. Under the Police (Conduct) Regulations 1999, a chief police officer has the power to suspend an officer where there has been a complaint which indicates that the officer's conduct does not meet the standards set out in the regulations, whether or not the matter has been investigated. In the case of early retirement on ill health grounds, police authorities have discretion to delay retirement until misconduct proceedings have been concluded.

Juvenile Secure Accommodation

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 March 1999, Official Report, columns 28–29, concerning juvenile secure accommodation, what progress there has been on reform of juvenile secure accommodation; and if he will make a statement. The Secretary of State for the Home Department, [92120]

Mr. Straw: I set out our programme of reform of juvenile secure accommodation in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford and Urmston (Ms Hughes), on 29 July 1998, Official Report, columns 255–56 and to my hon. Friend, the Member for Shipley (Mr. Leslie), on 8 March 1999, Official Report, columns 28–29. We had decided in principle that the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales should, from April 2000, become the commissioning and purchasing body for secure accommodation for children and young people on remand or under sentence. This should help to achieve the appropriate volume, type and spread of accommodation in the longer term, so that individual needs can be met more effectively.

The Board has provided advice on how to operate this. I have placed a copy in the Library. We endorse its approach as the basis for implementing, commissioning and purchasing next April. The Board will now consult local authorities and other relevant bodies on its proposals.

UN Conventions

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's Government have ratified (a) the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and (b) the UN Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women on behalf of (1) Gibraltar, (2) Jersey, (3) Guernsey and (4) the Isle of Man; and if he will make a statement. [92100]

Mr. George Howarth: Her Majesty's Government has not ratified the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) or the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) on behalf of Gibraltar, Jersey or Guernsey. The UNCRC and CEDAW were extended to the Isle of Man on 7 September 1994 and 7 May 1986 respectively.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92139]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There were a total of 126 appointments made to Home Office non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) between 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998. Six of the appointees were Asian and six were from other ethnic minority backgrounds.

195 appointments were made to NDPBs between 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. Twenty-one of the appointees were Asian and 27 were from other ethnic minority communities.

The Home Office Public Appointments Equal Opportunities Plan for 1999–2002, which was published on 25 May 1999, sets the Department the objectives of achieving 9 per cent. membership of ethnic minorities across its major public bodies (excluding the Commission for Racial Equality) and 9 per cent. for all its public appointments. On the latest available information, the figures achieved are respectively 10 per cent. and 14 per cent.

Correspondence

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to respond to correspondence about Mr. and Mrs. Janneh. [92029]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have now written to the hon. Member.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92454]

Mr. Straw: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out departmental performance against the targets set for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders are outstanding against asylum seekers whose applications have been refused; and if he will list (a) how long they have been outstanding and (b) his Department's estimated timetable for when they will be carried out. [92103]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information relates to persons recorded on the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's central immigration enforcement database (HOMIES) who have an unenforced deportation order outstanding against them and who have also had an asylum application initially refused. Some 1,575 such persons were recorded on HOMIES on 4 January 1999, the latest reliable snapshot figure. The breakdown by length of time since signing of the deportation order is given in the table.

In addition to those cases where further representations are being considered or where the decision to remove is subject to legal challenge, in many of these cases the subject of the deportation order has absconded and his or her present whereabouts are unknown. In some instances, it is even possible that the individual concerned has left the country of his or her own accord without the knowledge of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. In these circumstances, a timetable for completing the removal of the outstanding cases would have little meaning.

Persons recorded as having a deportation order outstanding against them and having had an asylum application initially refused, by length of time since the deportation order was signed, as at 4 January 1999

Time elapsed since deportation order signed[1]	Number of persons[2]
0 to 1 year	235
1 to 2 years	310
2 to 3 years	465
3 to 4 years	255
4 to 5 years	175
Over 5 years	135
Total	1,575

[1] Time elapsed between the date the deportation order was signed and 4 January 1999, the date of the database snapshot
[2] Figures are rounded to 5

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers who are waiting for their applications to be processed are currently held in one of Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will list (a) in which prisons they are located and (b) how long they have been in their current accommodation. [92101]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information relates to the snapshot of all asylum seekers detained solely under Immigration Acts powers, at any location in the United Kingdom, as at 29 June for port applicants and 30 June for in-country applicants. 351 such persons were recorded as awaiting an initial decision on their asylum application; the lengths of time they had been continuously detained solely under Immigration Acts powers are given in the table. Regrettably, information relating specifically to asylum seekers detained in prisons is available only at disproportionate cost.

Number of people recorded as being detained [1,2] on 29 June 1999 [3] and 30 June 1999 [4] who were awaiting an initial asylum decision [5] by length of detention [6]

Length	Number of persons
0 to 1 month	72
1 to 2 months	60
2 to 6 months	105
6 to 12 months	92
Over 12 months	22
Total	351

[1] Persons detained solely under the powers contained in Schedule 2 or 3 of the Immigration Act 1971.
[2] These figures are approximate because of the delay in recording receptions into, and releases from, detention and the large number of persons detained for a short period.
[3] Port figures obtained at 29 June 1999. After entry figures obtained at 30 June 1999.
[4] Principal asylum applicants only.
[5] In some cases the date a person enters detention may be understated due to the method of recording.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum seekers who are waiting for their applications to be processed are currently being housed by local authorities in temporary accommodation in London; and if he will list the numbers in each of the boroughs; [92104]

(2) how many children of asylum seekers who are waiting for their applications to be processed are currently in the care of local authorities. [92102]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This information is not available to the Home Office. Currently, asylum seekers who would otherwise be destitute may receive support in one of two ways. Those who apply at their port of entry are eligible for social security benefits and can find their own accommodation. Those who apply in-country may be supported by local authority social services departments under the terms of the National Assistance Act 1948 or the Children Act 1989. Asylum seekers make applications for support by local authorities direct to an individual local authority. The Home Office does not co-ordinate this information centrally.

Corruption

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the Government's proposals for consolidation and amendment of the law on corruption; and what length of consultation he proposes prior to introducing legislation. [92124]

Mr. George Howarth: An interdepartmental Working Group is currently considering the reform of the criminal law of corruption. We expect to receive their conclusions shortly. The Government hope to publish a discussion paper towards the end of the year, and will ensure that adequate time is allowed for responses.

First Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who appeared before magistrates courts in England and Wales were convicted on their first offence and sent to prison in 1998. [91987]

Mr. George Howarth: Estimates from the criminal histories of offenders in 1997 showed that there were around 3,700 people who appeared before magistrates courts in England and Wales who were given an immediate custodial sentence on their first court appearance for a standard list offence.

Compulsory Voting

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list and publish the research he has commissioned into the practice of compulsory voting in other countries; and if he will make a statement; [92132]

(2) what plans he has to increase public awareness of the issues raised by compulsory voting; and if he will make a statement. [92131]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are aware of academic research which has been published on voting practices in other jurisdictions, including compulsory voting, but has not commissioned any direct research on the subject. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has welcomed the recommendation by the Home Affairs Select Committee in its report on Electoral Administration and Law, published last year, that there should be a public debate on this subject, but we have no present plans to mount any public awareness campaigns on the issue.

Prisons (Health Care)

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the (a) Joint Prison Health Policy Unit and (b) Joint Prison Health Care Task Force was established; [92198]

(2) if he will list the members of (a) the Joint Prison Health Policy Unit and (b) the Joint Prison Health Care Task Force. [92209]

Mr. George Howarth: Following the review on the future organisation of prisoners' health care, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Angela Smith) on 29 March 1999, Official Report, columns 556–58, that a Joint Prison Health Policy Unit and a Joint Prison Health Care Task Force would be established in the course of 1999.

To enable an early start to be made with prison health reform, acting appointments to the positions of head of the Prison Health Care Task Force and Prison Health Policy Unit were made on 14 July 1999. Mr. Peter Coe is leading the Task Force, and Dr. Michael Longfield the Policy Unit, pending substantive appointments to be made following an open competition. Both posts are being advertised in the course of July 1999. Other staff appointments are expected to be made in the course of this autumn.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92175]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on changes in the membership of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate Complaints Audit Committee. [92878]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Ms Mercy Jeyasingham has been appointed as a new Member of the Complaints Audit Commission to replace Blair Greaves, whose five-year appointment has come to an end. Ms Jeyasingham is the Chief Executive of the Association for All Speech Impaired Children. She was formerly the Director of Education and Information at the National Eczema Society and the Head of Care Standards at Hammersmith and Fulham Social Services.

Forensic Science Service

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to lay before Parliament the Annual Report for the Forensic Science Service. [92877]

Mr. Straw: I have today laid before Parliament copies of the Forensic Science Service's (FSS) Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99.

The FSS met its financial target to recover its full costs and widened its accreditation through external bodies. However, it did fail to achieve the efficiency gain target and service delivery target. This was a challenging year for the FSS—expanding its work force by 400 and absorbing the associated recruitment and training costs. This is part of a two-year strategy to increase the capacity of the FSS to meet demand and eliminate backlogs of certain types of scientific work. The targets and plans agreed for 1998–99 were ambitious, and while the FSS failed to achieve two key targets mentioned above, it has already demonstrated a rapid improvement in quality of service during the latter part of 1998–99 and early 1999–2000. I am confident that this, and the move to Trading Fund from 1 April 1999, should be the springboard for further successes.

The targets for 1999–2000, the agency's first year of trading fund, are:

FSS Agency targets 1999–2000

	Targets
1. Financial indicators
Return on capital employed	Minimum 3 per cent.
Efficiency gain (three year rolling target)	Minimum 10 per cent.
2. Quality of Service indicators
Turnaround time	24 days
Achieve 90 per cent. agreed delivery dates
3. Milestone targets
Put in place service level agreements with police forces
Put in place routine and robust customer satisfaction measurement processes
4. Quality indicators
Maintain external quality accreditation

Tote

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the amount to be received by the Exchequer from the sale of the Tote. [R] [91095]

Mr. George Howarth: No estimate of this kind has yet been made. Further work is currently being undertaken to determine the best method for a sale of the Tote. Until that is completed, we shall not be in a position to indicate how the sale proceeds will be allocated.

Fox Hunting

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foxes he estimates have been killed as a result of hunting with dogs in each of the last 10 calendar years by hunts based in (a) the county of Leicestershire, (b) the East Midlands and (c) England. [91822]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is not collected centrally.

TREASURY

Structural Funds

14. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Welsh Office for 2000–01 to take into account recent decisions on structural funds. [91107]

Mr. Milburn: No. The National Assembly for Wales Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 was fixed in last year's CSR and is not open to review.

Married Couples Allowance

15. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans for the married couples allowance. [91108]

Dawn Primarolo: The recent Budget contained a generous package of tax and benefit reforms designed to target more help to families with children. As part of this package, the married couples allowance and related reliefs—which were not fulfilling their purpose—will be replaced by a new children's tax credit worth up to £416.

Low-income Families

16. Mr. Best: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has put in place to help working families on low incomes. [91109]

22. Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he plans to increase the net income of people in low-paid work. [91116]

31. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress with his plans to help working families on low incomes. [91128]

Ms Stuart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to help working families on low incomes. [91098]

Mrs. Roche: In October, we are introducing the Working Families Tax Credit with the new, generous child care tax credit. It will benefit nearly 1.5 million families on low incomes, almost twice as many as under the old system, and around 3 million children. It will provide a Minimum Guaranteed Income for a family with someone in full time work of £200 a week—£80 more than they would receive on Income Support. On average, families will gain £24 per week.

Together with the National Minimum Wage, the largest ever increase in Child Benefit, and tax and NICs reform, the WFTC will help lift around 800,000 children out of poverty.

The WFTC is a central part of a programme of extra support for families being delivered by the Government: by the end of this Parliament we will be spending an extra £6 billion a year on Britain's 13.8 million children.

Pollution

17. Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to ascribe an economic value to pollution. [91110]

Ms Hewitt: Government guidance on appraisal and evaluation encourages the valuation of all costs and benefits where possible, and qualitative assessment of those costs and benefits where monetary valuation is not practicable.

Windfall Tax

18. Mrs. Organ: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the use made of the funds raised by the Windfall Tax; and what further plans he has for their use. [91111]

Mrs. Roche: The Windfall Tax has enabled the Government to embark on the New Deal—the biggest ever programme to get unemployed and economically inactive people into work. The Windfall Tax has also enabled the Government to inject much-needed capital into over 10,000 schools across the country, enhancing our drive to raise pupil standards so that children begin to acquire the skills they will need to succeed later in life.

Early findings on the New Deal for Young People are largely positive, but we will need to wait for further evaluation in the Autumn to provide more accurate figures. The latest figures for young people show that 105,000 young people have secured jobs through the New Deal and a further 89,000 are gaining valuable training experience through one of the other options.

The Government have constantly extended and developed programmes under the New Deal since taking office. Its purpose is to give people new hope and new chances, and a route out of poverty and benefit dependency. This principle will guide future policy development, as resources allow.

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has for the use of the proceeds of the windfall tax. [91105]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Windfall Tax, which raised £5.2 billion, has enabled the Government to embark upon the New Deal—the biggest ever programme to get the unemployed into work. Over 284,000 have now entered the New Deal on the young persons scheme, and there are nearly 100,000 of the long-term unemployed. The Windfall Tax has also enabled the Government to put much-needed capital investment into over 10,000 schools. We will launch the New Deal for the over-50s in the autumn. Therefore, we are continuing to expand the New Deal over the next few months.

Travel (Low Income Groups)

20. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the proportion of income spent on travel by low income groups in (a) urban and (b) rural areas; and if he will estimate the percentage of that expenditure which was accounted for by the fuel duty escalator since its introduction. [91113]

Ms Hewitt: The latest available data on household spending patterns by gross income decile group are published in tables 1.1 to 1.3 of Family Spending 1997–98. For those households in the lowest gross income decile, approximately 12 per cent. of gross income was spent on motoring, fares and other travel costs. Approximately 0.5 of a per cent. of gross income was spent on the amount of fuel duty attributable to the fuel duty escalator. Separate estimates for urban and rural areas are not available.

Hypothecation

21. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on introducing hypothecation into the tax system. [91115]

Dawn Primarolo: In general, the Government determines their expenditure according to need, not according to the sources of their revenue. However, we will continue to look at each case on its merits.

Budget Statement

23. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received over the proposals in his Budget statement of 9 March relating to work; and if he will make a statement. [91120]

Mrs. Roche: Treasury Ministers have received a number of representations. Measures announced in the Budget will provide a better deal for working people. From October, every family with children and with full-time earnings will have a minimum income guarantee of £200 per week under the Working Families Tax Credit. People in work will have seen the gains from the new 10p rate of Income Tax in their May pay packets, and, from next April, the basic rate will be cut to 22p to reward work and ensure working families are better off. Over 450,000 people have already benefited from the New Deal and over 130,000 have found jobs.

Bank of England

24. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his policy of independence for the Bank of England. [91121]

Ms Hewitt: Many groups have commented and made representations to the Government on the monetary policy framework, of which the great majority have welcomed the Chancellor's decision to grant the Bank of England more independence. Because we have given the Bank of England operational responsibility to set interest rates to pursue the Government's inflation target, the public can be confident that low inflation will be delivered in practice. Inflation is currently close to target and expected to remain so.

Community Initiatives

25. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax incentives he has proposed to encourage businesses to support community initiatives. [91122]

Mrs. Roche: There is already a wide range of tax incentives to encourage businesses to support community initiatives, and many businesses make use of them.

This Government are considering as part of the Review of Charity Taxation how the tax system can best encourage businesses to support charitable causes. As part of this review, we issued a consultation document on Budget day which set our various proposals for further discussion, inviting responses by 31 August 1999.

EU Anti-fraud Office

26. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the role of the EU Anti-fraud Office. [91123]

Ms Hewitt: The ECOFIN Council adopted a Regulation on 25 May regarding a new European Anti-fraud Office which will be operationally independent within the Commission. The Office was established on 1 June. The final form of Office is in line with the Chancellor's initiative at the January ECOFIN Council.

The Office will be responsible for investigating fraud in the Community institutions and recommending follow-up action to be taken as a result of its investigations. It will also assist member states to co-ordinate anti-fraud work in respect of the EU budget and contribute to the design and development of methods of fighting fraud and other illegal activity.

Working Families Tax Credit

27. Mr. Lock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he is making with the implementation of the Working Families Tax Credit. [91124]

Dawn Primarolo: The Working Families Tax Credit will be introduced from October 5 this year, providing much needed assistance to an additional 500,000 low and middle-income families. The Tax Credits Act 1999, which will bring WFTC into existence, received Royal Assent on 30 June.

Growth Forecast

28. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about his latest forecast for growth. [91125]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor of the Exchequer receives numerous representations on all aspects of UK economic developments, including growth prospects.

Employment Growth

30. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet EU Finance Ministers to discuss prospects for growth in employment in Europe. [91127]

Ms Hewitt: To help promote best practice and job creation throughout Europe, the Chancellor will be discussing with other EU Finance Ministers Employment Guidelines for 2000 at ECOFIN on 8 November.

Health Insurance

32. Mr. Efford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce an ombudsman for individuals denied payments by permanent health insurers under the powers invested in him by the Insurance Companies Act 1982; and if he will make a statement. [91129]

Ms Hewitt: There are currently (i) a non-statutory Insurance Ombudsman, (ii) a Personal Insurance Arbitration Service and (iii) a Personal Investment Authority Ombudsman. To simplify redress for consumers, the Financial Services and Markets Bill provides for the establishment of a single Ombudsman Scheme. In establishing that scheme, the Financial Services Authority will be able to specify the types of activities, carried on by authorised persons, which fall within its remit. We envisage that will include complaints relating to Permanent Health Insurers.

EU (Payments)

33. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the (a) gross and (b) net amount paid to the EU in the most recent calendar year for which figures are available. [91130]

Mr. Milburn: Details of the United Kingdom's gross and net contributions to the EC Budget for the 1998 calendar year are set out in Table 3 of the White Paper "European Community Finances" (Cm 4382).

Resource Accounting

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications of moving to Resource Accounting for public borrowing for investment. [91112]

Mr. Milburn: Our plans for public borrowing for investment are defined by the fiscal rules that will continue to be adhered to. Forecasts for net investment and net borrowing are as set out in the Financial Statement and Budget Report. The move to Resource Accounting and Budgeting will ensure that the full economic costs of capital are properly measured and provide the correct incentives to manage capital properly once purchased.

Regional Development Agencies

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to consult Regional Development Agencies in the preparation of his economic targets. [91126]

Ms Hewitt: The Regional Development Agencies will be producing their first Regional Economic Strategies by the autumn, and these will be updated over time. The Government have asked that the strategies include a clear analysis of the regional economy. This will provide the Treasury with information which will contribute to the development of Government economic policy.

Private Finance Initiative

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will respond to the reviews undertaken by Sir Malcolm Bates and Peter Gershon, examining, respectively, the conduct of the Private Finance Initiative and Civil Procurement; and if he will make a statement. [93099]

Mr. Milburn: I am today placing in the Library of the House copies of Sir Malcolm Bates' Report and Peter Gershon's Report. We have accepted in full all the recommendations and our plans for taking forward these are set out in a document "Modern Government, Modern Procurement" which has also been placed in the Library.

Gibraltar

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress towards Gibraltar becoming passported to provide banking services. [88848]

Ms Hewitt: HMG intend to approve shortly the passporting of banking services into the UK by Gibraltar-based credit institutions.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many members of Britain's (a) ethnic minority communities and (b) Asian community he appointed to quangos between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; [92116]

(2) how many appointments to quangos he made between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. [92045]

Ms Hewitt: The Government announced in their publication "Quangos: Opening up Public Appointment 1999–2002" (copies deposited in the Libraries of both Houses) their commitment to the equal representation of women and men in public appointments and a pro rata representation of members of ethnic minority groups. In moving towards achieving these commitments, the Chancellor's departments have set an ambitious overall goal that each of the Chancellor's departments' public bodies should include at least one appointment from a member of the ethnic minorities by 2003, and that ethnic minorities should account for a minimum of 4 per cent. of appointments to larger bodies. In 1998, about 5.4 per cent. of all appointments by the Chancellor's departments and agencies were held by members of the ethnic minorities.

The table gives details of those appointments made to NDPB's of the Chancellor's departments and agencies over the periods requested. Information on the number of appointments by ethnic origin cannot be provided since the number of new appointees in each category is less than five:

	Appointments
NDPB	1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998	1 June 1999 to 31 May 1999
Policyholders Protection Board	4	1
Royal Mint Advisory Committee	3	2
Statistics Advisory Committee	2	0

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92169]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, HM Treasury has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92457]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to the hon. Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out the performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Monetary Policy

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the conduct of monetary policy since May 1997. [91118]

Mr. Milburn: The new monetary policy framework has enhanced the credibility and transparency of monetary policy and is delivering results: inflation is low and close to target, inflation expectations have fallen and long-term interest rates and mortgage rates are at their lowest for over 30 years.

Inland Revenue (Bournemouth)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason the Bournemouth office of the Inland Revenue is described as Inland Revenue South East. [92411]

Dawn Primarolo: The two Inland Revenue offices in Bournemouth are called Bournemouth 1&2 and are within the area of responsibility of the Director of the Inland Revenue South East Regional Executive Office.

Financial Services

Ms Keeble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure access to financial services in poorer communities. [91119]

Ms Hewitt: We are studying the reports of the two Treasury-led Policy Action teams, established following the September 1998 report of the Social Exclusion Unit, "Bringing Britain together".

Organic Farming

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were employed in the organic farming and foods sector in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; and how many are forecast to be employed in 1999–2000. [92094]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the form requested. However, our records show that in 1997–98, 292 farmers in the UK had land registered as organic or in conversion to organic farming. The equivalent figures for 1998–99 and to date for 1999–2000 are 733 and 1,165.

HEALTH

Prescription Costs

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average total cost per item, net of VAT, dispensed during the most recent year for which figures are available for (a) prescriptions issued by dispensing doctors and (b) prescriptions issued by prescribing doctors. [87967]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Support Services

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the terms of reference for the current review of market testing of support services for NHS support services; when the review will be completed; if he will publish the results and conclusions of the review; and if he will make a statement. [89818]

Mr. Denham: The key results and conclusions of the National Health Service Executive internal review of market testing will be included within new guidance on NHS support services which will be published later this year.

Consultant Charges

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if consultant surgeons and other consultants working in the private sector are obliged to publish their charging arrangements; and what assessment he has made of the extent of differential pricing for operations and consultations charged to insurance compared with charges made directly to patients. [91275]

Mr. Denham: Consultants working in private sector healthcare are not obliged to publish their charges and are free to charge whatever they wish and to offer preferential rates if they see fit to do so. The Department has no powers to intervene in contracts outside the National Health Service.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91680]

Ms Jowell: The Government are committed to ensuring their policies are fair and inclusive and responsive to this issue. This aim is contained in guidance (published 1998) which helps Departments consider the impact of their policies on women and other groups, and is a cornerstone of the Modernising Government White Paper.

The Women's Unit undertook to supplement this general guidance by developing more specific guidelines for policy makers on how to consider the needs and requirements of women.

A cross-departmental project led by the Women's Unit will produce these guidelines by drawing together principles of good practice and will illustrate their application through a series of case studies.

Final guidelines on gender impact appraisal together with a project report and the progress being made by Departments to assess the impact of their policies on women will be circulated to Government Departments and placed in the Library when complete.

Progress will also be reflected in future Modernising Government milestone reports.

Invoice Payments

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the performance of NHS trusts in complying with Government targets on payment of invoices. [91723]

Mr. Denham: The Public Sector Payments Policy (PSPP) target is for 95 per cent. of bills to be paid within contract terms or 30 days where no terms have been agreed.

National Health Service performance in paying bills promptly has improved significantly over the last few years. Currently the NHS pays 83 per cent. of its bills within 30 days—85 per cent. if the value of bills is taken into account. This is a significant improvement on the 79 per cent. performance reported in 1997–98.

NHS Executive regional offices monitor closely the PSPP performance of individual NHS trusts and work with poor performing NHS Trusts to improve compliance with the policy.

Children in Care

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what records are kept of the drugs administered to children in care; and if he will make a statement: [91714]

(2) in what circumstances a parent of a child in care may refuse prescribed medical treatment for the child; and if he will make a statement; [91715]

(3) what safeguards are in place to ensure that children in care are protected from receiving (a) inappropriate medical treatment and (b) incorrect prescribing of drug treatment; and if he will make a statement. [91716]

Mr. Hutton: Whenever possible, children placed in local authority care should be given a medical examination and a written health assessment before they are placed. A child should then be medically examined every six months up to the age of two, and at least every twelve months thereafter. Once assessed, the medical needs of children in local authority care should be set out in the general care plan for each child. Children would be registered with a general practitioner and any necessary medical treatment and drug prescribing would be carried out under the supervision and guidance of the child's general practitioner or, if a child is in a hospital, under the supervision and guidance of the appropriate hospital medical staff.

Details have to be kept of all medicinal products administered to children placed in a residential home, and by whom they are administered. This must be recorded in writing on each occasion in a central record and on the child's individual record. Where a medicinal product may not be safely self-administered by a child it should be undertaken only by a member of staff of the home or by a doctor or nurse. Children aged 16 and over are in general entrusted with the retention and administration of their own medication, and should be provided with a secure place to keep medication.

Children of 16 and 17 are entitled to consent on their own behalf to medical treatment, as are those under 16 who have sufficient understanding of what is proposed. Where a child is subject to a care order, the local authority acquires parental responsibility for the child and may consent to treatment on behalf of the child, including in circumstances where the child's parent has refused to consent.

Nurse Consultants

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his target for the recruitment of nurse consultants; what estimate he has made of the impact on NHS employment costs of this initiative; and if he will make a statement. [91543]

Mr. Denham: It will be for National Heath Service bodies to determine the number of nurse, midwife and health visitor consultants they wish to employ. Terms and conditions of employment are being negotiated and we will issue guidance to the NHS about establishment of such posts when these have been completed.

Student Nurses (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many student nurses are working at NHS hospitals within the Greater London area. [91773]

Mr. Denham: There are currently 9,972 whole time equivalent nurses and midwifes studying for degrees or diplomas within London. During their period of training, a student nurse or midwife would either be on a clinical placement or in a university carrying out academic work.

Cancer Care

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned on the impact on cancer services (a) in Greater London and (b) the South East of the decision to designate St. Bartholomew's as a cancer centre; when the research will be published; and if he will make a statement. [91780]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Executive's London Regional Office is undertaking a review of the planned commissioning of cancer services in North East and North Central London. The review forms part of the assessment of the current development programmes at Bartholomew's and The London NHS Trust, University College London Hospitals NHS Trust and Havering Hospitals NHS Trust. Ministers will receive a report upon the review's completion.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the Government bodies involved in formulating cancer care policies and strategies, with a brief outline of each organisation's work; and if he will make a statement. [92036]

Mr. Hutton: We recognise the importance of seeking expert advice to assist in the development of policy for cancer detection and care. The National Cancer Forum has been established to advise on the on-going implementation of the Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services. It includes leading cancer clinicians, specialist nurses, representatives from cancer research, voluntary and patient organisations, and regional National Health Service representation. The National Cancer Forum is chaired by the Chief Medical Officer.

The Cancer Care Action Group is a forum which brings together a larger group of voluntary organisations with the NHS Executive regional structure. It is chaired by the Chief Nursing Officer and its role is to advise, and make recommendations to the National Cancer Forum, on key issues on developments in cancer and palliative care policy at a national level and the implications for voluntary sector organisations, and to represent those with cancer and their carers in so doing.

The United Kingdom National Screening Committee, chaired by Dr. Henrietta Campbell, Chief Medical Officer for Northern Ireland, advises UK Health Ministers about the introduction, modification or withdrawal of national screening programmes. The Advisory Committee on Breast Cancer Screening and the Advisory Committee on Cervical Screening are both currently chaired by Professor Martin Vessey. Their role is to advise on the development of the breast and cervical screening programmes. The Advisory Committee on Cancer registration advises on the strategy and development of the national cancer registration scheme.

Acute Care

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is set by the NHS as the minimum acceptable (a) distance between hospital beds in acute care wards and (b) accommodation space per patient in acute care wards. [91934]

Mr. Denham: Health Building Note (HBN) No. 4 "Adult Acute Wards" (1990) stipulates a minimum requirement for bed space (in multi-bedded wards) as 2900 mm x 2500 mm. More recent guidance published in 1995 in HBN 40 volume 2 indicates that this should be increased to 2900 mm x 2700 mm to reflect the increasing use of hoists, extra space around the bed for access and movement and in recognition of the space needs for those who depend on walking frames and wheelchairs to assist mobility.

Accommodation space per patient in an acute ward will vary depending on several factors, eg the mix of single rooms with en-suite facilities and multi-bedded bays, the extent of support area provided, the physical layout of the ward and the total number of beds.

HBN 4 provides a notional figure of 23.96 square metres per bed.

HBN 4 and HBN 40 are available in the Library.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the minimum acceptable provision of bath facilities in an acute care hospital ward and (b) the maximum acceptable number of patients per bath and per toilet facility. [91933]

Mr. Denham: Health Building Note (HBN) 4, "Adult Acute Wards" (1990), recommends one bathroom and one assisted bathroom for 24 or 28 bedded wards.

HBN 4 also includes a schedule of accommodation that indicates two bathrooms to 28 patients, one being an assisted bath, but that basic ratio would need to be considered by planners in the light of the specific medical requirements of the ward.

More single bedrooms with en-suite facilities are being provided in new ward accommodation and this will affect the general level of toilet provision. HBN 4 schedule of accommodation indicates a ratio of one toilet to 3.5 patients in a 24 bedded ward which has 3 single rooms with en-suite facilities.

Copies of HBN 4 are available in the Library.

Ambulance Travel Times

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the population has a blue light ambulance travel time greater than 40 minutes from home to the nearest accident and emergency department. [91976]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are recorded as having been prescribed beta interferon through the NHS for the latest period for which data is available. [91876]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available. Beta interferon is mainly prescribed and dispensed within hospitals. Hospital dispensing data, and the number of patients for whom drugs are prescribed, are not held centrally.

Patient Survey

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if patient groups were consulted on the development of the NHS survey of patients; and if he will make a statement. [92050]

Mr. Denham: A reference group, including representatives from the National Consumer Council, community health councils and the College of Health has advised on the general population and coronary heart disease surveys. A separate working group, including a number of cancer patient bodies, is currently working with the National Health Service Executive on the best approach to surveying patients with cancer. Qualitative research to establish the views of patients has also been undertaken in designing each of the surveys.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps were taken to ensure that a fair representation of minority groups, with particular reference to (a) ethnic minorities, (b) those with sight and hearing difficulties and (c) those with learning difficulties, were included in the NHS survey of patients. [92049]

Mr. Denham: The patient survey questionnaire was issued to respondents drawn from the electoral roll. A comparison with independent data sources on a range of variables—such as ethnicity, social class, economic activity, and household composition—confirmed that the sample was nationally representative. A helpline was set up by the consortium administering the survey specifically to assist people who may have had difficulty in completing the questionnaire.

Code of Practice on Openness

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Code of Practice on Openness in the NHS is distributed and made accessible to the general public; and if he will make a statement. [92037]

Mr. Denham: A leaflet for the public which summarises the Code of Practice on Openness in the National Health Service is widely available on NHS premises and in general practitioners' surgeries.

Copies of the Code of Practice on Openness itself are available to any member of the public, on request from the Department or any NHS trust or health authority.

NHS Direct

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the NHS Direct service will be available to the public in Shropshire; and if he will make a statement. [92040]

Mr. Denham: The roll-out of NHS Direct in the West Midlands Region is proceeding according to plan and NHS Direct will be available in the whole of the region by the end of the year 2000. Shropshire Health Authority, working closely with local stakeholders including general practitioners, is contributing to the planning of the provision of NHS Direct in the area, and this work is currently progressing well.

Patient Information

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the new guidance from the General Medical Council on patient information; and if he will make a statement. [91982]

Mr. Denham: The General Medical Council (GMC) consulted the Department in the course of developing new guidance on "Confidentiality: Providing and Protecting Information". The guidance, which updates previous guidance issued by the GMC, provides helpful clarity on a number of issues that are of concern to the medical profession.

Antibiotics

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment of risk to human health he has made of the use of antibiotics used as growth promoters in farm animal food products; and if he will make a statement. [92038]

Ms Jowell: The Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food's (ACMSF) report on microbial antibiotic resistance in relation to food safety will be published shortly. The use of antibiotics as growth promoters is one of the topics covered in the report. Both the Veterinary Products Committee and the ACMSF have taken public health concerns into account when advising the Government on the use of antibiotics as growth promoters.

National Electronic Library for Health

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how patients and members of the public will be consulted on the development of the National Electronic Library for Health; and if he will make a statement. [91985]

Mr. Denham: The National Electronic Library for Health is one of the major initiatives highlighted in the new National Health Service Information Strategy "Information for Health", which places great importance on information for the public. The National Electronic Library for Health project team is working closely with the NHS Direct initiative and the Centre for Health Information Quality to ensure that the Library properly addresses patient information needs. The project team receives feedback from the public and patient interest groups through those initiatives, and from clinicians and information specialists who work directly with the public.

In addition, a colloquium on the interests of patients, carers, service users and the public was held on 21 April 1999. This was attended by representatives of Community Health Councils, voluntary groups and patient self help groups. There is also a public website on the internet at http://www.nelh.nhs.uk which describes the proposed strategy for the Library in detail.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many members of Britain's (a) ethnic minority communities and (b) Asian community he appointed to quangos between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; [92117]

(2) how many appointments to quangos he made between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. [92046]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is given in the tables. The Department's most recently set goals and objectives for ensuring recruitment from all sections of society were published by the Government on 25 May in "Quangos: Opening Up Public Appointments 1999–2002" copies of which are available in the Library.

Pontefract and Pinderfields Hospitals

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide guidance to Wakefield Health Authority in relation to their next strategic outline case for capital finance for Pontefract and Pinderfields Hospitals. [92065]

Mr. Denham: On 16 July 1999 senior officers of the National Health Service Executive met the chief executives of the Wakefield Health Authority and the Pinderfields and Pontefract Hospitals National Health Service Trust. Items discussed included how the Wakefield Health Authority might progress its case for new capital finance.

Health Authority Finance

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's timetable for the next round of health authority bids for capital finance. [92097]

Mr. Denham: An announcement will be made in due course on the timing of future waves of capital prioritisation.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 2 July 1999, Official Report, columns 399–400, on clinical negligence, what was the nature of the comparison made by the NHS Executive between the costs of commercial versus public sector insurance for clinical negligence risks; when it was carried out; what was the indicative margin between NHS-provided clinical negligence insurance premiums and comparable commercial cover; and if he will list the features of NHS-provided clinical negligence cover that cannot be provided by commercial insurers. [92108]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The decision to establish the clinical negligence scheme for NHS trusts as a voluntary risk pooling scheme took account of the fact that no established commercial insurance arrangements were available for clinical negligence. As I said in my answer of 2 July 1999, Official Report, columns 399–400, the NHS Executive has consistently discouraged trusts from using commercial insurance for clinical negligence risks on value for money grounds.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of clinical negligence claims, indicating separately the cost of legal fees, for 1997–98; and what is the estimated cost for 1998–99. [92112]

Mr. Denham: Clinical negligence costs charged to expenditure in the 1997–98 summarised accounts for the National Health Service in England amounted to £144 million. Information on the cost of legal fees is not available. Accounts for 1998–99 are not yet available.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was paid by NHS trusts in premiums for clinical negligence cover through the clinical negligence scheme for trusts for the latest year for which data is available. [92305]

Mr. Denham: The amount charged to National Health Service trusts in 1998–99 was approximately £15.2 million.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92176]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has continued to be guided by the convention governing access to the papers of the previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Operating Department Practitioners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish a statutory scheme for registration of operating department practitioners; and if he will make a statement. [92440]

Mr. Denham: We expect the employment of operating department practitioners to be confined to qualified and competent practitioners and propose to consult on guidance to health authorities and National Health Service trusts about the practical steps required to implement this effectively. We will keep the matter of statutory regulation under review for the longer term.

Medical Devices Agency

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts of the Medical Devices Agency. [92873]

Ms Jowell: We have received the Report and Accounts of the Medical Devices Agency and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of Sections 5(2) and 5(3) of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

NHS Estates Executive Agency

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the Annual report and Accounts 1998–99 for the NHS Estates Executive Agency. [92874]

Mr. Denham: We have agreed the Agency's Corporate Plan 1999–2000 to 2001–02, Key Tasks and Targets for 1999–2000 and Business Plan 1999–2000 and have placed copies in the Library.

NHS Pensions Agency

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the Annual Report and Accounts of the NHS Pensions Agency. [92875]

Mr. Denham: We have approved the Report and Accounts which has today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of Sections 5(2) and 5(3) of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

Adverse Incidents

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many investigations into adverse incidents have been carried out by each NHS regional office in each of the last 10 years. [92111]

Mr. Denham: Inquiries into adverse incidents are usually carried out by or on behalf of National Health Service trusts and health authorities rather than by NHS Executive regional offices. Regional offices may be involved in making sure such inquiries take place where there are statutory or other requirements for them to do so.

Accident and Emergency (Leicestershire)

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the adequacy of the current emergency and accident services for North West Leicestershire; and what changes are planned thereto. [92079]

Mr. Denham: The provision of accident and emergency services for Leicestershire is an integral part of Leicestershire Health Authority Health Improvement Programme which is reviewed annually by the National Health Service Executive and agreed with local primary care groups.

As part of the national accident and emergency modernisation programme Leicester Royal Infirmary has been made an award of £3.7 million to modernise accident and emergency services to meet likely future demand.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92451]

Ms Jowell: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06 which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members, in the 1998 calender year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Friend the Member for Glasgow, Anniesland (Mr. Dewar) on 15 April 1999, Official Report, column 309, which covered the period May 1997 to 31 March 1999. Ten parliamentary questions were tabled to my Department for written answer on a named day in the remaining period 31 March 1999 to 14 April 1999. Of these, 70 per cent. received a substantive reply on the named day.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91883]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

Crown Estate

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his responsibilities with regard to the Crown Estate. [92206]

Dr. Reid: Although the functions of the Crown Estate Commissioners in managing the Crown Estate are reserved, properties and interests which form the Crown Estate in Scotland are subject to the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament. However, the power of direction over the Crown Estate Commissioners will remain with the United Kingdom Government and is exercised jointly by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and myself.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [92000]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her today by my noble Friend the Minister for Women. As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that its policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working closely with the Women's Unit to develop good practices for carrying out gender impact appraisal. When developing policies, we have considered how they would affect different parts of the community, although since new guidance on Equal Treatment was promulgated in November 1998, we have not had occasion to carry out any formal Gender Impact assessments.

Legal Aid

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what responses he has received from the public on his reforms of the legal aid system. [92014]

Mr. Vaz: Since the publication of the White Paper "Modernising Justice" on 2 December 1998, and the introduction of the Access to Justice Bill in the other place on 3 December 1998, my predecessor and I have received 337 letters about the reforms of the legal aid system from members of the public, directly and through their MPs.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92144]

Mr. Vaz: Of the non-judicial public appointments to the Lord Chancellor's non-departmental public bodies, 303 were made in the first period, of which five were Asians and none were other ethnic minorities, and 199 were made in the second period, of which six were Asians and five other ethnic minorities.

My Department's plan on equal opportunities was included in the plan published by the Government on 25 May 1999 and deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92445]

Mr. Vaz: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Orders in Council

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Council how many orders in council have been made since 1 January 1998. [92244]

Mrs. Beckett: 927, up to and including the Council held on 21 July 1999. The Orders are broken down as follows:

Orders relating to the appointment and swearing in of Privy Councillors: 53 (5.7 per cent.)

Orders relating to Royal Charters: 65 (7 per cent.)

Statutory Orders relating to domestic business: 171 (18.4 per cent.)

Statutory Orders relating to overseas business: 42 (4.5 per cent.)

Orders relating to the Channel Islands: 85 (9.2 per cent.)

Orders relating to University Statutes: 31 (3.3 per cent.)

Orders relating to appointments: 34 (3.7 per cent.)

Orders under the Burial Act 1853: 25 (2.7 per cent.)

Orders approving schemes of the Church Commissioners: 274 (29.6 per cent.)

Orders giving consent to Royal Marriages: 5 (0.5 per cent.)

Civil Service Orders: 4 (0.4 per cent.)

Orders approving Judicial Committee reports: 129 (13.9 per cent.)

Sealing Orders for Proclamations: 6 (0.6 per cent.)

Prorogation of Parliament: 1 (0.1 per cent.)

Orders on ecclesiastical matters: 1 (0.1 per cent.)

Orders relating to the Royal Navy: 1 (0.1 per cent.)

This does not equate to the number of new Privy Councillors, since some Councillors are appointed by Order and sworn in at a subsequent Council. In such cases there will be two Orders.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the number and proportion of young people who on leaving the New Deal employment option then move on to unsubsidised employment. [90317]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In the period January 1998 to April 1999, of the 5,800 young people who have left the New Deal employer option for known destinations, 50 per cent. moved into unsubsidised employment. In addition, 2,500 left for unknown destinations. A recent independent and reliable survey showed that 43 per cent. of leavers into unknown destinations had, in fact, left the New Deal for paid employment.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to increase the clarity of information made available to firms wanting to join the New Deal. [90192]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 13 July 1999]: The main vehicle for providing information to employers wanting to join New Deal is the "New Deal for Employers" booklet. This was produced in consultation with employers in order that the information contained in it is useful and relevant and presented in a clear, user-friendly way. A telephone survey of employers showed that 95 per cent. of employers were positive about its presentation. 83 per cent. said that they found the content relevant or very relevant.

In addition to this main item of literature, the Employment Service staff, including Business Managers, pro-actively communicate with both large and small employers. This includes meetings with large groups and one-to-one discussions to explain the New Deal and provide a contact within the Employment Service to whom the employer can address any questions.

The New Deal Task Force is stimulating wider engagement in the New Deal through employer coalitions in major cities, and through contact groups of Human Resource Directors, small and medium employers, and intermediary bodies with employer customers.

The Task Force and Employment Service are working with key employers and employer organisations in major growth sectors such as hospitality, construction and retail to improve the information and enhance the engagement of employers in the New Deal in these sectors.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what help will be given to widows, widowers and carers by the recently announced New Deal 50-plus; and if he will make a statement. [93059]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We will be giving extra help to carers receiving Invalid Care Allowance and widows and widowers receiving the proposed new Bereavement Allowance and Widowed Parent's Allowance by opening up access to the New Deal 50-plus. I expect this to be in place from the autumn of this year.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the work done to date by the Training Standards Council to establish a system for evaluation of local partnerships for New Deal. [92311]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Training Standards Council published in June "Partners for Quality", a framework developed specifically for the inspection of education and training provision within the New Deal for Young People Options. The inspection programme starts in October 1999.

A-levels

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students were submitted for examination at A level in (a) mathematics, (b) physics and (c) chemistry in England and Wales in (i) 1970, (ii) 1980, (iii) 1990 and (iv) the latest year available; and in each case what was that figure as a percentage of the total A-level entries in all subjects in that year. [91146]

Mr. Mudie: The information available for GCE A-level examinations by selected subject in England and Wales is shown in the table.

Number of entries at GCE A level in mathematics, physics and chemistry and, as a percentage of all entries in each year shown in England and Wales

	Mathematics	Physics	Chemistry	All entries
1970
Number of entries (000s)	64.4	41.5	30.8	441.9
Percentage of all entries	14.6	9.4	7.0	—
1980
Number of entries (000s)	86.2	52.3	45.1	589.3
Percentage of all entries	14.6	8.9	7.6	—
Number of entries (000s)	69.8	38.9	39.8	704.5
Percentage of all entries	9.9	5.5	5.6	—
Number of entries (000s)	67.4	32.7	40.4	760.7
Percentage of all entries	8.9	4.3	5.3	—

Data are not directly comparable with figures for 1992 and 1998 due to changes in data sources.
Figures for 1986 to 1991 were not published in this format, so are unavailable. 1992 data are therefore provided as they are comparable to 1998 data.

Maintained-school Places (Costs)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average cost of (a) a place in a maintained school in the secondary sector and (b) a place in a maintained school in the secondary sector to age 13 years according to the most recent figures. [91672]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is not possible to differentiate by age the average cost of pupils. However, the average cost per secondary school pupil in England based on 1998–99 budget figures was £2,930.

Right to Study Initiative

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many 16 and 17 year olds will qualify over the next year for the Right to Study Initiative in (a) England and Wales, (b) the North-East of England and (c) the Tynemouth constituency. [91941]

Mr. Mudie: The latest estimate, at the end of 1997, was that 110,000 employees in England were aged 16 or 17, not qualified to level 2, and not working towards a level 2 qualification. Comparable figures for Wales and particular regions of England are not available.

Higher Education

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students enrolled in full-time higher education courses to study (a) physics and (b) mathematics in England and Wales in each of the years from 1993 to 1998. [91943]

Mr. Mudie: The information is given in the following table.

Full-time entrants to higher education courses[1] England and Wales[2]

	Year of entry
	1993[3]	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998

Physics	4,684	4,205	3,957	3,650	3,801	3,650
Mathematics	5,633	4,955	4,842	5,313	5,268	4,822

[1] Postgraduate and undergraduate courses

[2] Excluding a small number of HE students in Further Education Colleges

[3] Excluding a small number of HE students in HEIs in Wales. Figures for 1993–94 were collected on a different basis to those in later years

[4] Excluding combined courses which contain mathematics or physics in combination with other subjects

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92136]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made a total of 96 appointments and re-appointments to non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) between 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998. Of these, one was of Asian origin, from a total of two who were of ethnic minority origin.

From 1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999, my right hon. Friend made a total of 119 appointments and re-appointments to NDPBs. Of these, nine were of Asian origin, from a total of 19 who were of ethnic minority origin.

Child Labour

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the Government will (a) ratify the ILO Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labour and (b) encourage other Governments to ratify the Convention. [92125]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I hope to be in a position to make an announcement on ratification of Convention 138 in the near future.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92180]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Long-term Unemployed

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what new measures he is taking to help the adult long-term unemployed. [93060]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We consulted widely on new Employment Zones with personal job accounts (PJAs) earlier in the year. I am today launching our invitation to tender to run the new Zones at a conference in London. A copy of the bidding procedures will be placed in the Library. There will be 12 Zones in England, two in Wales and one in Scotland, which will help 48,000 long-term unemployed people in areas where the problem still exists despite the improvement in the economy. The new Zones will offer both those who run them and those who benefit from them real flexibility in the way existing funds are used to move from benefits to employment. After a first step lasting no more than three months, those who have not left the register will move on to a personal job account with a fully costed action plan agreed between participants and their personal advisers. Personal job accounts will enable unemployed people to take more responsibility for their path back to employment. We intend to run Employment Zones in the following areas from April 2000: Brighton and Hove; Birmingham; Brent; Caerphilly, Blaenau Gwent and Merthyr Tydfil; Doncaster; Glasgow; Haringey; Liverpool and Sefton; Middlesbrough, Redcar and Cleveland; Newham; North West Wales; Nottingham City; Plymouth; Southwark and Tower Hamlets.

Employment Service

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the revised Employment Service Framework Document; and when the five-year review of the Employment Service is to take place. [93061]

Mr. Andrew Smith: A revised Framework Document for the Employment Service (ES) will be published on 30 July and copies will be placed in the Library. The document includes the ES's current Aim and Objectives, new financial arrangements, and arrangements for liaison with Scotland and Wales following devolution.

The next five-year review of the Employment Service will be completed not later than 31 December 2000.

Student Loans

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many student loans are now overdue; if he will provide a breakdown of the amounts by bands; and what steps are being taken by his Department and the Student Loans Company to recover them. [92309]

Mr. Mudie: At 31 March 1999, 125,000 accounts were overdue out of a total of 999,400 due to repay. These figures are provisional and include loans sold to the private sector. The breakdown of amounts overdue by banding is not available, but the Company had collected 90 per cent. of moneys due by 31 March 1999.

The Student Loans Company follows rigorous collection procedures. Its procedures currently are comparable with industry standards and will increasingly reflect the influence of the private sector owners of sold loans in improving collections practice.

British Sign Language

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information he has collected on the number of persons currently qualified in British Sign Language and to what levels; and what action he is taking to encourage the attainment of these qualifications. [92312]

Mr. Mudie: The Department does not have information on those holding qualifications in Sign Language. A number of qualifications in Sign Language and aiding communication for deaf people are included in Schedule 2(a) of the 1992 Further and Higher Education Act and are therefore eligible for funding by the Further Education Funding Council. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority has supported the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People in developing individual units in Sign Language which are designed to aid take-up of qualifications.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what reply he has sent to recent representations from the Commission for Racial Equality on ethnicity and employment in higher education. [92379]

Mr. Mudie: Ministerial colleagues and I have received copies of the Commission for Racial Equality's summary report on ethnicity and employment in higher education. Most of the recommendations are for higher education institutions and their representative bodies. We have agreed to meet the Commission once the full report is published.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92443]

Mr. Mudie: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Pesticides Safety Directorate were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Central Science Laboratory. [93154]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Central Science Laboratory were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Meat Hygiene Service. [93155]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Meat Hygiene Service were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science. [93156]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Caroline Flint: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency. [93157]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency were laid before Parliament today. Copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate. [93158]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Cattle Movement Service

Mr. Caton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the standards of service for the British Cattle Movement Service. [93159]

Mr. Rooker: The British Cattle Movement Service is making available its standards of service to organisations in the cattle industry and other groups with an interest. I am putting a copy of the BCMS Citizen's Charter in the Library of the House today.

BCMS is committed to issuing all cattle passports within 10 working days of receipt of a valid and complete passport application, and also to updating its database of cattle movements in all cases within 10 working days of receiving a valid and complete notification that an animal has moved. These are demanding standards, which I am confident BCMS will meet.

Copies of the BCMS Citizen's Charter will be sent to all cattle farmers in Great Britain later in the year.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has given to Meat Hygiene Service personnel on their future roles under the Food Standards Agency. [88291]

Mr. Rooker: MHS personnel have been provided with a detailed question and answer briefing outlining their future roles under the Food Standards Agency (FSA). As the date for the launch of the Agency gets closer, further information will be provided.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will instruct all operational staff of the Meat Hygiene Service to record in writing complaints made to them by staff or management of slaughterhouses, meat cutting plants and poultry processing plants concerning the conduct or performance of Meat Hygiene Service staff and to forward those records to the Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service for response within a reasonable time, and require that those records be available for inspection by auditing staff of the Joint Food Safety and Standards Group. [88292]

Mr. Rooker: No; this is not necessary. The Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) has already established modern customer complaints procedures which provide arrangements for dealing with complaints quickly at the point of service delivery, and those needing to be raised formally and escalated for senior management attention.

A simple guide was issued to all MHS customers in March 1999 outlining how customers can make complaints or comment about MHS services. These procedures meet the latest best practice principles promoted by the "Service First" unit of the Cabinet Office and are part of the MHS Quality Management System, which was registered by the British Standards Institution to the international standard BS EN ISO 9002:1994 in June 1998. The MHS is committed to continual improvement in delivering quality services, and it will continue to keep under review the effectiveness of its complaints mechanisms.

Genetically Modified Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he has received on research conducted in the People's Republic of China about (a) the yields of genetically modified crops and (b) the quantities of chemical treatments used for such crops as opposed to non-genetically modified crops. [91731]

Mr. Rooker: I have received no such reports about research conducted in the People's Republic of China.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of reports from the industry that genetically modified crops grown in the United States and in China produce higher yields and are treated with lower levels of chemicals than the equivalent non-genetically modified crops grown in the same countries. [92098]

Mr. Rooker: I have received no such reports from either the United States or the People's Republic of China.

However, a summary of a US Department of Agriculture Report comparing GM and non-GM crops appears on the internet and indicates that there was no difference in yield and pesticide use in some areas; a significant increase in yield in six out of 18 areas; and a decrease in pesticide use in some regions. UK farming conditions are different to those in the US and it is difficult to tell how relevant the results may be to this country.

OTMS

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken towards ending the over-30-month scheme; and if he will make a statement. [91899]

Mr. Rooker: The over-30-month scheme (OTMS) is an EU scheme, the rules of which are set by the European Commission. The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee have identified criteria against which the controls on beef over-30-months of age can be reviewed in the future and began addressing this at its meeting in March. However, the Committee recognise that this will require careful study and will almost certainly need to be considered at several meetings. In the light of the Committee's conclusions, and after consultation with all interested parties, the Government will consider what changes to the OTMS (if any) could be made consistent with the continued protection of public health and which they might then recommend to the Commission for their consideration.

Antibiotics

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safety assessments he has made of the use of antibiotics as growth promoters in farm animals; and if he will make a statement. [92039]

Mr. Rooker: The use of additives in animal feedingstuffs, including antibiotic growth promoters, is controlled in the EU by Council Directive 70/524/EEC as amended. No feed additive is permitted unless it satisfies criteria of safety and efficacy. Recent concerns about the development of microbial resistance to antibiotics has led to a ban on the use of four antibiotic growth promoters in the EU, which took effect on 1 July 1999. The Government are advised on the use of antibiotics as growth promoters by the independent scientific Veterinary Products Committee, which is keeping the matter under close review.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 449, to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Lorna Fitzsimons), if he will suspend badger culling while alternatives are considered in response to recommendation 69 of the Standing Committee to the Bern Convention on the Conservation of European Wildlife and Natural Habitats. [92032]

Mr. Rooker: No. The Government believe that their present strategy and actions in controlling bovine TB, including the badger culling trial, represent the best means of finding a scientifically sound and sustainable policy for the long term. The Agriculture Select Committee report "Badgers and Bovine Tuberculosis" (HC 233) endorses this view. The Government have responded to the Bern Convention recommendation explaining why the action they are pursuing is fully consistent with the provisions of the Convention.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to counter the rise in TB in dairy herds. [92432]

Mr. Rooker: In August 1998, the Government announced a five-point strategy of research and controls to deal with bovine tuberculosis, taking forward the recommendations of Professors Krebs and Bourne. This strategy was recently endorsed by the House of Commons Agriculture Select Committee as representing the best way forward. The Government's response to the Committee's report was published on 5 July (HC612) and sets out the steps being taken to control this disease.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the conclusions of the MAFF programme on the link between badgers and the spread of bovine TB at East Offaly in the Irish Republic. [92221]

Mr. Rooker: Professor Krebs reviewed the data from previous large-scale badger clearances, including in the area of East Offaly in the Irish Republic. His conclusion was that the sum of evidence > "strongly supports the view that badgers are a cause of herd breakdowns".

Krebs noted, however, that the absence of adequate experimental controls in previous badger clearances, including the East Offaly clearance, made it impossible to eliminate alternative explanations for the observed fall in herd breakdown rates or to quantify the contribution that badgers made to bovine TB. He recommended a controlled experiment to test rigorously the effectiveness of different strategies in Great Britain and to provide a sound basis for future policy.

The Government accepted the Krebs' recommendations, and established the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB, chaired by Professor John Bourne, to oversee their implementation and advise on other relevant scientific work. The work now in hand, including a randomised badger culling trial and new epidemiological and disease control research, aims to provide the information needed to secure a sustainable future policy to control TB in cattle.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92185]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Department has been guided by the convention governing access to the papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Farm Medicines

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the cost of farm medicines; and if he will make a statement. [91993]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 21 July 1999]: We have received representations about comparatively high prices of veterinary medicinal products in the UK and we are carefully considering the issues and whether further action is called for. However, the pricing of veterinary medicinal products is not controlled by either UK or European Community legislation. Decisions on the wholesale costs of veterinary medicines are matters for the companies manufacturing the products, taking into account commercial factors such as development and production costs and anticipated volume of sales in the member state concerned.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the relative prices for farm medicines in the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic; and if will make a statement. [91994]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 21 July 1999]: There are no price controls on veterinary medicines in the EU. Prices generally reflect the market conditions and distribution practices in each member state. A comparison of wholesale prices in the UK and the Republic of Ireland shows that some products are cheaper in Ireland and others are cheaper in the UK.

BSE (USA)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates his Department asked the United States Government to comment on the recent reports of the presence of BSE in the USA; to which United States department these requests were addressed; and on what dates the United States Government replied. [92250]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 12 July 1999, Official Report, column 88.

Farming (Financial Support)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of Government financial support allocated for the year 1998–99 for (a) organic farming and (b) conventional farming; how much has been spent to date; and how much is expected to be so allocated in 1999–2000. [92405]

Mr. Rooker: The forecast for the UK for programmes on agriculture for 1998–99 is £762.2 million, and £660.0 million for 1999–2000, of which £1.9 million and £4 million respectively is for aid for conversion to organic farming. These figures are for national expenditure and do not include contributions from the Guarantee Section of the EAGGF. With EAGGF contributions, the figures for aid for conversion to organic farming are £3.8 million for 1998–99 and £8 million for 1999–2000.

In addition, organic farmers are entitled to receive all support payments available generally to farmers.

Labelling

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what UK regulations govern the labelling of produce deriving from (a) other European states, (b) applicant countries to the European Union and (c) elsewhere. [92223]

Mr. Rooker: General labelling rules for food sold within the European Union are set out in Directive 79/112/EEC. They apply no matter where the food has come from, and are implemented here by the Food Labelling Regulations 1996 (as amended).

Cattle Identification

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the charges in each EU member state for passport and tagging of calves. [92219]

Mr. Rooker: Most member states charge their farmers for cattle identification, although often on bases which cannot be compared with the proposed charges for passports here. For member states for which we have information, the position in early 1999 was:

Austria: Farmers pay for ear tags: no charge otherwise.

Belgium: Charge of about £0.85 per animal per year.

Denmark: Charge of £1.50 per animal per year, plus £2 per passport (issued for exported cattle).

Finland: Tagging and registration fee of around £2.50 per animal.

France: £2.30 per animal.

Germany: Around £1.60 per animal but some additional costs recovered from levies paid by farmers.

Luxembourg: No charge.

Netherlands: £1.70 per animal per year.

Sweden: Charge for registering animals:

up to £0.90 for registration by phone or letter;

£5.40 for passports (issued for exported cattle).

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the advantages of putting out the Cattle Moving Database to private tender. [92220]

Mr. Rooker: The Cattle Tracing System (CTS) is currently administered by the British Cattle Movement (BCMS), which is part of MAFF. The CTS has been in operation for less than a year. Any assessment of the current arrangements for administering it, and alternatives, would be premature.

Pesticide Tax

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what other European countries are subject to a pesticide tax; and at what levels. [92222]

Mr. Rooker: I understand that, currently, Denmark, Sweden and Norway tax all pesticides, while Belgium applies a tax to non-agricultural uses of the herbicides atrazine, diuron, isoproturon, simazine and pentachlorophenol. The latest rate of tax in each country is understood to be as follows:

Denmark

ad valorum tax on highest retail value:

insecticide: 54 per cent.

herbicide: 33 per cent.

Non-agricultural use: 3 per cent.

Sweden

20 Swedish krone (about £1.50) per kg active ingredient basic rate = 15 Norwegian krone (about £1.20) per ha—varied according to banding:

Seed treatment pesticides and biological products—basic rate × 0.5

Products constituting low risk to health and environment—basic rate × 1.0

Products constituting high risk to health/low risk to environment or, low risk to health and high risk to environment—basic rate × 4.0

Products of high risk to health and to environment—basic rate × 8.0

There are higher rates pro-rata for household use.

Belgium 1999

10,000 Belgian francs (about £160) per kg of active ingredient.

I am not aware of specific pesticide taxes in other European countries.

Beef (Export)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when abattoirs other than St. Merryn's in Cornwall will be approved for the processing of beef for export; and what estimate he has made of the number of abattoirs which will be approved for the processing of beef for export in the year following 1 August. [92336]

Mr. Nick Brown: It is up to abattoirs to apply for approval. If they do so we will deal with their application as quickly as possible.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects the remaining restrictions on the export of beef to be lifted; [92373]

(2) if he will make a statement on his policy pressing for the export of beef-on-the-bone and of live cattle to be resumed. [92374]

Mr. Nick Brown: In my statement to the House on 14 July 1999, Official Report, column 405, I made it clear that I am working for the day when we are able to trade in beef on equal terms with other member states. I will put proposals to the European Commission for further relaxations of the export ban when I judge that we have a strong case which can be justified by science. In particular, the resumption of trade in beef on the bone, and beef from cattle more than 30 months old, will need to be informed by the views of the Government's scientific advisers.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the final inspection and approval by his Department needed before an abattoir can export beef will involve; and for what reason these inspections had not been carried out in preparation for the lifting of the beef export ban. [92344]

Mr. Nick Brown: To gain approval, a slaughterhouse must demonstrate that it has the facilities and control procedures to meet the requirements of the DBES. The assessment of premises seeking approval, which will include an inspection visit, will be made by a specially trained officer of the State Veterinary Service.

It was not possible to carry out these inspections or to grant approval until we had received and considered the recommendations in the Commission Inspectors' final report.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if cattle over 30 months old can be exported. [92342]

Mr. Nick Brown: No live cattle can be exported. Beef exported under the Date-based Export Scheme must be from cattle aged under 30 months at the time of slaughter.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the impact on animal welfare of the only abattoir licensed to process beef for export being located in Cornwall. [92345]

Mr. Nick Brown: Statutory rules are in place concerning the welfare of livestock during transport and at slaughter. They apply irrespective of where in the country the animals are transported or where the slaughter is taking place.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what help the Government plan to give to beef exporters in Great Britain. [92337]

Mr. Nick Brown: My Department has sent detailed advice about the Scheme to all abattoirs that may be eligible to participate in the Scheme and set up a helpline to give advice. Abattoirs can, free of charge, make test applications to determine the proportion of their animals which might be DBES eligible. This is designed to help them make their commercial decisions, and my officials are prepared to offer any further advice necessary to help abattoirs and other meat processing establishments in their consideration of how they might benefit from the Scheme. The Department has established a Beef Export Liaison Group to exchange views of those involved in beef exports which will monitor progress of the DBES and identify key markets. In addition, I and my colleagues will be taking every opportunity to promote the Date-based Export Scheme (DBES) to industry here and customers abroad.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when European Commission inspectors were invited to Britain to examine the facilities through which beef exports would be channelled. [92335]

Mr. Nick Brown: The inspection arrangements were the outcome of discussions and correspondence between my officials and Commission officials during January and February, which covered points of detail on the proposed operation of the scheme and the scope of and timetable for the inspection. We agreed with the inspectors that they would come at the end of March or during April. The date was subsequently confirmed for the week commencing 12 April.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what help the Government will provide with the running costs of the export scheme for slaughterhouses during the initial period of export build up after 1 August. [92338]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Government's policy is to recover the costs of operating the Date-based Export Scheme (DBES) from those who choose to benefit from it. The Government have, however, spent more than £1 million on developing the scheme, including the IT systems which are necessary to support it, which will not be recovered through charges.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects British beef supplies to be resumed to British service men serving abroad. [92339]

Mr. Nick Brown: The provisioning of the armed forces is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. The worldwide ban will be lifted from 1 August, so it will be legally possible to export beef for the use of British service men serving in the European Union and, subject to the rules of the Governments of the countries concerned, to service men serving in third countries.

Beef (School Meals)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will write to local authorities to encourage them to put British Beef back on their school menus; and if he will place a copy of his letter in the Library. [92340]

Mr. Nick Brown: Ultimately it is for Local Authorities themselves to decide whether or not to have beef, or indeed any other food products, on school menus. Nevertheless, I am currently preparing a letter to Local Authorities setting out the case for British Beef, following my earlier representation on this matter. Once this has been issued, I will place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

WALES

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91881]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

An additional three people were recruited by the Welsh Office between 25 May and 30 June. Of the eight people, six were recruited under the New Deal for 18–24s and two under the New Deal for 25-plus.

On 1 July, all staff working for the Welsh Office in Wales transferred to the National Assembly for Wales.

Waterhouse Report

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the Waterhouse report; if the report will be published bilingually; and if he will make a statement. [87795]

Mr. Michael: As soon as the Tribunal of Inquiry submits its report, it will be presented to Parliament and published as quickly as possible.

The degree of bilingual publication will be considered in the light of the desirability of early publication in the public interest and of the Welsh language scheme.

National Assembly for Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Government plan to issue the concordats for the National Assembly for Wales; and if he will make a statement. [90897]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) on 7 July 1999, Official Report, column 1019.

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92452]

Mr. Michael: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members in the 1998 calendar year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Objective 1 Status

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information has to be supplied to the EU Commission before 1 November relating to the West Wales Objective One status application; and if he will make a statement. [92377]

Mr. Michael: By 1 November, the National Assembly will need to submit a full single programming document for objective 1 to the European Commission. This will need to meet the Commission's requirements as laid out in the Vade Mecum.

Objective 1 status has already been secured. Release of the funds depends on the acceptance by the Commission of the submitted plan.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Savidge: To ask the President of the Council what recent assessment she has made of the state of readiness of Government Departments and the wider public sector for millennium compliance. [93205]

Mrs. Beckett: Good progress continues to be made with work on the Government's business critical systems and in most Departments the bulk of the work is already complete.

However, I remain concerned that a number of programmes continue to show slippage in their planned completion dates. Four departments are indicating for the first time that they will not now complete their programmes until September or later. They are the Intervention Board, the Serious Fraud Office, the Inland Revenue and the Northern Ireland Prison Service. In all these cases I have written to Cabinet colleagues asking them personally to monitor progress very carefully, and to ensure that any necessary remedial action is taken.

The Government will continue to manage the process closely. This includes ensuring that full Business Continuity Plans are in place, and tested, by October—indicating how seriously the Government are taking this problem, and how hard we are working to resolve it. However we should remember that slippage at this stage is an inevitable part of the process. Across the private and public sectors, those working on this problem find that the more they do, the more they find there is to do.

Although there has been good progress in the wider public sector since I last reported, organisations in many sectors have still to complete their programmes. However, all infrastructure providers reported an improved position at the National Infrastructure Forum on 13 July. This included the NHS, and police and fire services, which no longer have any organisations assessed as having "red" status (severe risk of material disruption which there may not be enough time to rectify)—and all of whom included some organisations with "blue" status (the assessment has not identified any risk of material disruption). In local government, the assessment process was started later, and this sector still shows a small percentage of red authorities—2 per cent. in England and 12 per cent. in Scotland. Government Offices in England and the Scottish Executive will continue to work with these authorities, and with the others, to meet the target of blue status by the next Forum meeting in October. The great majority of infrastructure providers are currently rated "amber", that is, there is still some risk of material disruption but plans are in place to deal with this, and the target is again "blue" by October.

In order that hon. Members can see at a glance the position in central Government and the wider public sector, I am publishing a set of tables showing progress in Government Departments up to the end of June, and a table of the Action 2000 colour codes for the wider public sector, as announced to the National Infrastructure Forum on 13 July. In addition, a full set of the returns completed by Government Departments, agencies and key bodies in the wider public sector will be placed in the Libraries of the House and published on the internet. This is in line with the Government's commitment to openness that has characterised our handling of the millennium bug issue since day one.

I said last month that I would report to the House on a monthly basis from now on. As the next returns from Government Departments and agencies will be received during the parliamentary recess, we propose to write to all Members in late August.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Council on what date she last used a train in the course of her official duties. [92650]

Mrs. Beckett: On 20 July 1999.

CABINET OFFICE

Government Annual Report

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when the Government's Annual report for 1998–99 will be published. [93258]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Report will be published on 26 July. Copies will be laid before the House (Cm 4401) and placed in the Libraries of the House. Members of this House, Ministers in the House of Lords and Opposition spokesman in the Lords will each be sent a copy of the Report. In addition, I shall be placing in the Libraries of the House a summary of the comments received on last year's report. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House intends to find time for the report to be debated when the House returns after the summer recess.

Civil Service Fast Stream Report

Mr. Roy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he expects to publish the fourth annual Civil Service Fast Stream report. [93259]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I have today placed in the Libraries of the House the Fourth Annual Civil Service Fast Stream Recruitment Report. It covers the year from 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999, and reports the results of Fast Stream competitions completed during that period and action undertaken for future competitions.

The report shows that in most areas the Civil Service did not fill all its Fast Stream vacancies in 1998, in line with the experience of other major employers. Recruits continued to be drawn from a variety of backgrounds and the standard of entry to the Fast Stream Development Programme has remained consistently high. Despite the fall in numbers, the quality of the applicant field has continued to increase.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will estimate the average cost of providing (a) office accommodation and (b) secretarial support for (i) a departmental special adviser and (ii) one official at Grade 5 and above in the last year for which figures are available. [87964]

Mr. Kilfoyle: There are no set rules on the level of provision of office accommodation and secretarial support for civil servants, including special advisers. Information on actual costs is not held centrally. It is therefore not possible to provide the information requested. However, in respect of the Cabinet Office, members of the Senior Civil Service with a JESP score of between 7 and 12 (equivalent to an old style Grade 5) normally have their own office and a dedicated secretary. The two special advisers appointed by my right hon. Friend, the Minister for the Cabinet Office, share an office and a secretary.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92652]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: In accordance with the terms of the Ministerial Code, Ministers are required always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. Trips in and around London (Edinburgh/Cardiff/Belfast), which account for the majority of my working week, will normally be made by Government car. The last time I used a train in the course of my official duties was yesterday when visiting Lancaster in my capacity as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Government Car Service

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the expenditure on the Government Car Service in the last year for which figures are available, separately identifying the cost of ministerial cars. [92674]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 23 July 1999:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me in my capacity as the Chief Executive responsible for the Government Car Service to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the cost of the Government Car Service.

The total cost of providing all Government Car Service services in 1997/98 (the last year for which figures are available) was £7.79 million. The estimated cost of vehicles and drivers allocated to Minsters and their private offices was £4.3 million, although they are also used for several other purposes such as the movement of documents and for use by officials as directed by the ministerial private office.

The Government Car and Despatch Agency charges customer departments for the services provided on a basis that recovers all costs.

Consultation Papers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Marsden) of 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 456, on consultation papers, if the statement in the Cabinet Office guide on conducting written consultation exercises, concerning using the internet to publish and receive replies, indicates that the Government's policy is that responses to consultations should be published. [92772]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Cabinet Office guide on conducting written consultation exercises states that, where circumstances permit, a summary of views and information collected from the consultation exercise should be produced and made available. But where respondents request confidentiality for their comments, their wishes should be respected, in accordance with the existing Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Following the best practice principles contained in the guide is the responsibility of individual Departments, agencies and other relevant bodies.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what date she last used a train in the course of her official duties. [92651]

Mr. Foulkes: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last used a train in the course of her official duties on Thursday 22 July 1999.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will make available to the House the Annual Report and Financial Statements 1998–99 of the New Millennium Experience Company. [93263]

Janet Anderson: Copies of the New Millennium Experience Company's Annual Report and Financial Statements 1998–99 have today been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Dome (Refrigerants)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure that commercial operators in the Millennium Dome use non-HFC refrigerants; and if he will make a statement. [89934]

Janet Anderson: New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has recognised the unique opportunity afforded by the project to demonstrate that an undertaking of this scale can be developed within the framework of a positive environmental policy. In the context of a single year of operation and the attendant time and budgetary constraints, the Company's aim is to improve on prevailing standards wherever possible, and to mitigate any adverse impact where such impact might occur. As a result a number of innovative environmental initiatives are integral to the project—for example a comprehensive Environmental Plan underpinning all aspects of policy and new river bank ecology; and the transformation of a derelict jetty into a wildlife haven.

As regards commercial operators in the Dome—who will primarily be caterers—NMEC is procuring the majority of the refrigeration equipment that they will use and is aiming to adopt "greenfreeze" technology wherever practical. In those instances where equipment is procured by others, NMEC is strongly encouraging them to adopt the same approach.

Millennium Dome (Performers)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what period of rest performers of the main show in the Dome will have between performances on (a) normal days and (b) peak days for visitors; [91264]

(2) how many different companies will be used to perform the main show in the Dome on (a) normal days and (b) peak days for visitors. [91265]

Janet Anderson: New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is establishing and training an ensemble company of 160 performers, forming two casts of 80 each. Each cast will comprise 60 on stage and 20 understudies. On "one session" days, one cast will be used. On "two session" days, the two casts will be used. The terms and conditions of the cast members (including rest periods) will be in accordance with an Equity approved contract and in accordance with the Working Time Directive.

Millennium Dome (Visitor Information)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what information systems will be in place to inform visitors to the Dome of the estimated queueing times for individual zones and other attractions. [91270]

Janet Anderson: New Millennium Experience Company's (NMEC) operational strategy which covers all aspects of visitor management, safety and comfort has been developed with the aim of ensuring an exemplary visitor experience. Information about the capacity of each exhibit zone and any related queueing time (which NMEC aims to keep to a minimum) will be notified throughout the Dome via an information display system and staffed information points.

Millennium Dome (Policing)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many police will be on duty at the Dome; how they will be paid for; and what estimate he has made of the cost of their service. [91268]

Janet Anderson: Police will not be on duty within the Dome site although, as with other visitor attractions and public events, they will attend as necessary in response to any situation requiring their presence. The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is in close and continuous liaison with the Metropolitan Police Service who are responsible, as normal, for the costs of their services where situations require their attendance.

Additional officers are being seconded into Greenwich Division to ensure that sufficient resources are available both on New Year's Eve and throughout the Millennium year.

Millennium Dome (Photography)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if photography (a) with and (b) without a flash will be permitted inside the Dome. [91257]

Janet Anderson: Photography with and without flash will be permitted inside the Dome.

Millennium Dome (Safety)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the designers of the zones were instructed to build a maximum evacuation time into their designs. [91263]

Janet Anderson: Emergency exit requirements are a fundamental aspect of the design of the Millennium Experience at Greenwich and have been the subject of expert advice prior to submission of plans for approval by the relevant licensing authority.

Millennium Dome (Merchandising)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what royalties the New Millennium Experience Company has negotiated in respect of the entertainments and merchandise developed for the Millennium Experience; and who will receive such income after 2000. [91269]

Janet Anderson: Details of contractual arrangements between the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) and suppliers are commercially confidential. Arrangements for the disposal or assignment of all the company's assets after the Millennium Experience are subject to the approval of the Millennium Commission and the Government. Final decisions on the future use of the Dome will not be taken until 2000, when the Millennium Experience is up and running for all to see.

Millennium Dome (Catering)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if visitors will be permitted to bring food and drink into the Dome. [91266]

Janet Anderson: Visitors to the Millennium Experience at Greenwich will be allowed to bring food and drink into the Dome.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91676]

Mr. Chris Smith: As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working closely with the Women's Unit to develop good practices for carrying out gender impact appraisal.

The Women's Unit guidance: "Policy appraisal for equal treatment" has been circulated to policy Divisions in the Department.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91891]

Mr. Chris Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

Since that time my Department has employed a further New Dealer making a total of two since 1 April 1999.

Holocaust Remembrance Day

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement in the proposed Government committee on Holocaust Remembrance Day. [92158]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 20 July 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department on 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 400.

United Christian Broadcasters

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport where the petition handed in to the Government by United Christian Broadcasters in 1990 is now kept. [92265]

Janet Anderson: I understand that the petition was presented to the previous Administration by UCB during the passage of the Broadcasting Act 1990. It has not been possible to locate this petition among the papers that were transferred to this Department when it was created.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92659]

Mr. Chris Smith: In accordance with the terms of the Ministerial Code, Ministers are required always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. Trips in and around London, which account for the majority of my working week, will normally be made by Government car. The last time I used a train in the course of my official duties was earlier this month when visiting Leeds.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Attorney-General on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92658]

The Attorney-General: I travelled to the Crown Prosecution Service in Colwyn Bay by rail on 8 March this year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the contract to develop the Benefits Agency Customer Accounting and Payment Strategy IT system was awarded; and to which company or consortium; [92833]

(2) what the deadline is for completion of the Benefits Agency Customer Accounting and Payment Strategy IT system; [92835]

(3) what the estimated cost is of developing the Benefits Agency Customer Accounting and Payment Strategy system. [92834]

Angela Eagle: The Customer Accounting and Payments Strategy (CAPS) is a continuing programme involving new systems and processes to create a single customer account in order to improve the way in which the Benefits Agency manages customer details and benefit payment information and, until the cancellation of the Payment Card element of the Horizon project, to support the payment of benefit by Card at post offices.

The systems to do this were built by the Department's Information Technology Services Agency including the integration of an accounting package purchased from IBM during the Spring of 1996.

Following the cancellation of the Payment Card and the announcement of the intention to pay benefits by Automated Credit Transfer, it will be necessary to reassess what further work should be undertaken on CAPS in addition to those elements that have already been implemented. Consequently no estimate of final completion dates or future development costs is presently available.

However, the work to create a single, consistent, source of customer details for use by all benefits is already well advanced. All the Benefits Agency major benefit systems are now linked to the CAPS systems and there are presently 17 million customer records held on the new system that is in daily and constant use by staff in the Benefits Agency. The work to complete the transfer of records is due to be completed in 2002.

Departmental Expenditure (Wales)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the level of spending on social security in Wales in each of the last five years (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the United Kingdom total broken down to show spending on (i) benefit payments, (ii) Wales's pro-rata share of United Kingdom administration costs and (iii) actual spending on central and local administration and the branch network for facilities in Wales. [92644]

Mr. Timms: DSS accounts for its administrative costs operationally (by Agency and Business Unit). It does not maintain accounting records by geographical territory and it is therefore not possible to provide reliable expenditure information covering all Departmental operations in the format requested. An estimate of Social Security Benefit Expenditure in Wales in the past five years can be found in the table.

Estimated Social Security benefit expenditure in Wales (and as a percentage of Great Britain expenditure)

	Expenditure (£million)	Percentage
1994–95	4,910	6.1
1995–96	5,160	6.1
1996–97	5,540	6.3
1997–98	5,490	6.2
1998–99	5,660	6.2

Note:

1. Expenditure excludes payments of certain benefits to people living overseas

2. Expenditure figures have been rounded to nearest £10 million

Source:

The above figures are consistent with those published in the Departmental Report 1999

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amounts his Department and its agencies spends on (a) running costs, (b) wage costs and (c) other administrative costs for those facilities and staff based in Wales, indicating the headquarters administration costs and the total costs for the branch network. [92640]

Mr. Timms: DSS accounts for its administrative costs operationally (by Agency and Business Unit). It does not maintain accounting records by geographical territory and it is therefore not possible to provide reliable expenditure information covering all Departmental operations in the format requested. Information for the Benefits Agency's operations in Wales is provided in the table.

Benefit Forecasts

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each state benefit, if he will forecast the number of claimants and total cost by benefit for Wales for the next three years together with forecasts for (a) Wales's pro-rata share of the United Kingdom administration costs and (b) budgeted costs for the central and local administration and the branch network for facilities in Wales. [92641]

Mr. Timms: Forecasts of future expenditure and number of claimants for each Social Security benefit by country are not readily available. A breakdown by country of the future costs of administering the Department and its agencies is also not readily available.

Pensioners (Wales)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the numbers in Wales of (a) single pensioners and (b) married couple pensioners (i) in 1980 and (ii) at the latest available date. [92642]

Mr. Timms: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

State retirement pensions are paid to individuals. Category A pension is payable on a person's own contribution record and Category B pension is paid to a married woman (or a widow) on her husband's insurance record. It is not possible to identify someone's marital status from the category of pension.

Number of people in receipt of retirement pensions in Wales November 1980 and March 1999

	November 1980	March 1999
Men and women	455,000	561,000
Men	160,000	206,000
Women	295,000	355,000

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department will publish a regulatory impact assessment of the burden on employers of administering stakeholder pensions. [92850]

Mr. Timms: A regulatory impact assessment for the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, including the estimated effects of stakeholder pension proposals, was published when that Bill was introduced in the House of Commons on 10 February 1999. A revised assessment was issued when the Bill was introduced in the House of Lords on 21 May 1999. Copies are available in the Library.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners households were entitled to winter fuel payments in 1998–99, broken down between those in receipt of income support and others. [92854]

Mr. Timms: An estimated 7.6 million pensioner households were entitled to a payment in 1998–99, of which 1.4 million were receiving Income Support. The remaining eligible households were receiving one or more of the other qualifying benefits.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92664]

Mr. Darling: On 7 July 1999, when I travelled to Leicester to visit the Braunstone Estate, a New Deal for Communities partnership.

Chief Adjudication Officer

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the 15th annual report of the Chief Adjudication Officer; and if he will make a statement. [93204]

Mr. Darling: The report is being published today. The Chief Adjudication Officer's findings record that, in a difficult year for the Agencies, standards have in general been maintained. He is, in particular, encouraged by the fact that the Agencies continue to look for ways to effect improvements, with numerous initiatives at both the local and national level. Quite rightly the Chief Adjudication Officer has taken the opportunity to praise his own staff for their work.

The Chief Adjudication Officer welcomes the changes to decision-making and appeals that are being introduced this year. These changes will create a simpler, clearer, more accessible system.

Chief Executives will take on the Chief Adjudication Officer's responsibilities for guidance to decision-makers and monitoring and reporting on standards. They will be accountable for the quality of decision making in their agencies. The changes will help to get decisions right. If a mistake is made, it can be put right more easily. Notifications will be clearer and easier to understand.

Improvements will be made to the handling of appeals. The ending of the rigid requirement for three person tribunals means that expert resources can be better focused on the issues raised in each appeal. Appeal waiting times will be cut. A new agency will be set up to handle the administration of appeals and I will set demanding targets for clearing appeals. Some improvements have already been made. People who appeal now receive the papers at an earlier stage in the process. Record numbers of appeals were cleared last year. The backlog of oldest cases is being systematically cleared.

These changes will deliver real improvements in service to clients. Also we are preserving the essential elements of the current system. Decisions will continue to be made impartially by applying the law to the facts of each case. Clients will still have the right of appeal to an independent tribunal.

The post of Chief Adjudication Officer will disappear in November. There will be a final report for the period April 1999 to November 1999. This will be published early next year. From July to November, as the new Decision Making and Appeals system is implemented, the responsibility for monitoring and reporting on the standards of decision making within the Agencies will pass to Agency Chief Executives.

Domestic Violence (Immigration Rules)

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will provide public funds for those eligible under the concession to immigration rules in respect of domestic violence and the one year rule; [92466]

(2) what assessment he has made of the feasibility of reclaiming public funds from liable relatives in instances where such support may be given to those subject to the concession in the immigration rules in respect of domestic violence and the one year rule. [92469]

Angela Eagle: People who are awarded indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom under the concession to the immigration rules announced by the Home Secretary can claim Social Security benefits. Those people who are pursuing an application for indefinite leave under the concession will continue not to have access to the benefit system until a favourable decision has been made on their application.

Married couples are liable to maintain one another under section 78 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. The Benefits Agency aims to pursue liable relatives for spousal maintenance wherever a separated person claims an income related benefit.

Departmental Estate (Scotland)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 July 1999, Official Report, columns 305–07, (1) if he will list the running costs including (a) staff costs and (b) payments to Trillium and Newcastle Estate Partnerships in relation to his Department's estate in Scotland; [91307]

(2) if he will list the services offered at each of the properties detailed; which are involved in the processing and assessment of entitlement to benefits; what stages of the assessment are carried out at each centre; and if he will make a statement. [91308]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 19 July 1999]: During the financial year 1998–99, the salaries of staff employed in Scotland amounted to £130 million. During the same period, the costs of running the estates, including payments to Trillium, amounted to £28 million. In addition the Information Technology Services Agency has two properties in Scotland, which are sub-let to Electronic Data Services Ltd. on a full cost recovery basis which includes rent paid to Trillium. It is not possible to apportion accurately the costs of centrally administered benefits and services which relate to Scotland. The Newcastle Estate Partnership is not involved in the running of DSS buildings in Scotland.

Through its network of local offices, the Benefits Agency provides a comprehensive and accessible service throughout Scotland for over 20 different social security benefits. These offices also accept claims applications and notices of change of circumstances for centrally administered benefits.

Applicants for Child Support in Scotland are administered from the Agency Centre in Falkirk.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Bills

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of bills were paid on time by Government Departments and their agencies during the financial year 1998–99. [93427]

Mr. Byers: There has been a further improvement in the payment performance of Central Government as a whole. The majority of Departments met the previous target of paying 95 per cent. of their suppliers' bills on time.

There is no room for complacency and it is disappointing to see that a number of Departments and Agencies, including DTI, failed to meet this year's target of 97.5 per cent. I have taken steps to remind all Departments and Agencies, including DTI, of the importance of paying suppliers' bills on time and meeting the target.

The target for the 1999–2000 financial year has been increased: to pay 100 per cent. of undisputed suppliers' bills on time. It is particularly important that the public sector sets an example to business and is seen to pay its bills on time.

We are committed to improving the UK's payment culture. Late payment is a serious problem, particularly for small businesses. Not knowing when customers' bills will be paid means uncertain cashflow, increased borrowings, higher costs and reduced profits.

Government Departments and their Agencies are required to monitor their payment performance and to publish the results in their Departmental or annual reports. The following table lists, by Department, the proportion of bills paid within 30 days, or other agreed credit period, of receipt of a valid invoice for financial year 1998–1999.

Weights and Measures

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about weights and measures. [93428]

Dr. Howells: I have today placed in the Library of the House a report by my Department on the adoption of the International System of Units—the modern version of the metric system. Copies of the report are available from the Vote Office.

Since 1965, successive Administrations have promoted the use of metric weights and measures in order to assist industry to compete in an increasingly metric global market. The debate since 1965 has been about the pace and timing of the change from imperial to metric units for specific purposes.

Metrication is now under way in the United States. Other Commonwealth countries have gone metric. The metric system has been taught in our schools since 1974. Metric units are now used by the public sector for most purposes.

The retail sector has adopted metric weights and measures gradually, for an ever-increasing range of goods. Today, more than 90 per cent. of consumer goods sold by weight or measure are sold in metric units. Under legislation made in 1994, goods sold loose by weight—mainly fresh food—must be priced and weighed in grams and kilograms after 31 December 1999.

I am pleased to be able to announce that in response to representations from the Government and others, the European Commission has proposed that non-metric units may be used alongside metric units until 31 December 2009, pending completion of the US metrication programme. This will enable UK manufacturers and retailers, who wish to do so, to dual mark quantity and price in metric and imperial units over the next ten years. Retailers can continue to display the price per imperial unit alongside the price per metric unit. Consumers can continue to express in ounces and pounds the quantity they wish to buy. Retailers will weigh out the equivalent quantity in grams and kilograms.

The supermarket chains, which account for 80 per cent. of sales of loose goods, have started selling loose goods in metric weights. To assist small retailers and their customers with the change, DTI is publishing an information package. Further information and advice is also available from DTI's metric helpline and website.

Company Auditors

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received the 1998 annual reports of the recognised supervisory bodies for company auditors under Part II of the Companies Act 1989; and if he will make a statement. [93426]

Mr. Byers: I have received the 1998 annual reports of all the recognised supervisory bodies for company auditors, and have placed copies in the Library of the House. My Department will be discussing the contents of the reports with the bodies as necessary.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92657]

Mr. Byers: On 6 July 1999.

Indonesia

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the ECGD payments rescheduled with Indonesia since 1 May 1997; what was the size of such rescheduling; and whether any payments rescheduled related to exports of defence and security equipment and services. [92231]

Mr. Wilson: Indonesia's official creditors agreed in September 1998 to reschedule certain sovereign debt payments falling due between 6 August 1998 and 31 March 2000. The debt to be rescheduled relates to principal payments in respect of contracts entered into prior to 1 July 1997. Indonesia continues to maintain interest payments on this debt. ECGD expects to reschedule over 200 separate payments totalling around £260 million over the period, 75 per cent. of which is in respect of defence business.

Assisted Areas

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received calling for the inclusion of Peterston Super Ely, Dinas Powys and Wemvoe Wards with the Vale of Glamorgan in the Tier 2 (Article 87(3)c) areas in the Government's proposals for new assisted areas. [92793]

Mr. Wills: Representations from the Vale of Glamorgan Council did not call for the inclusion of these wards.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what potential development land exists in the Peterston Super Ely, Dinas Powys and Wemvoe Cyr Wards in the Vale of Glamorgan which might benefit from regional selective assistance. [92795]

Mr. Wills: This is a matter for the Vale of Glamorgan Council to consider in the context of its Development Plan.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he received from the Vale of Glamorgan, Cardiff and Newport county councils on the Government's proposals for new assisted areas. [92794]

Mr. Wills: My Department received two representations; one from Newport County Borough Council, the other jointly from the City and County of Cardiff Council, Newport County Borough Council and the Vale of Glamorgan Council.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria he used to designate the Peterston Super Ely, Dinas Powys and Wemvoe Wards in the Vale of Glamorgan as Tier 2 (Article 87(3)c) areas in the Government's proposals for new assisted areas. [92792]

Mr. Wills: The criteria are set out in the document, "The Government's proposals for new Assisted Areas". Some wards were included to provide compact contiguous connections to other proposed areas.

"Driving Productivity and Growth in the UK Economy"

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the report, "Driving Productivity and Growth in the UK Economy", has been brought to his attention. [92034]

Mr. Byers: The report, "Driving Productivity and Growth in the UK Economy", by the McKinsey Global Institute, was discussed at a set of joint DTI/HM Treasury productivity seminars in the summer and autumn of 1998. Its findings were taken into account in the framing of both the Competitiveness White Paper, "Our Competitive Future: Building the Knowledge Driven Economy", and the 1998 Pre-Budget Report.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92141]

Mr. Byers: Data on public appointments are not recorded centrally in the form requested. From the information we do hold centrally the details I can give in response to the request are as follows:

1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998

The total number of appointments made was 121 of which 4 (3.3 per cent.) were members of ethnic minority communities.

1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999

The total number of appointments made was 214 of which 10 (4.67 per cent.) were members of ethnic minority communities.

Full details of all the appointments made, including the identity of those appointed and the positions which they hold, are published in the Government's expenditure plans for DTI for both 1997 and 1998. Given the data that are publicly available about appointments it is not possible to disclose information that further breaks down the categories of ethnic minority appointees as to do so risks identifying individuals without their consent. Data on ethnic origin are gathered for monitoring purposes, not for disclosure leading to possible individual identification.

I also refer the hon. Member to the Department's equal opportunities goals as published, following an announcement by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 25 May 1999, Official Report, columns 116–17, in "Quangos: Opening up Public Appointments 1999–2002". This sets out the DTI goals of achieving a year on year increase in the number of people of ethnic minority origin appointed to public bodies rising to 6 per cent. by 2002 (currently 4.4 per cent.) and an increase for the number of women appointees rising to 33 per cent. by 2002 (currently 27 per cent.).

National Assembly for Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish, before the summer adjournment, the most recent draft of the concordats between his Department and the National Assembly for Wales. [92325]

Mr. Byers: Work on the concordats is proceeding well. We hope to be in a position to put the concordats to the Assembly Cabinet shortly. It is not our intention to publish the concordats in advance of that.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91884]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to the hon. Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times Ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials at each meeting. [90408]

Mr. Byers: Since 1 January 1998 DTI Ministers have held meetings with Irish Ministers on the following occasions:

Date	Ministers	Venue
Secretary of State for Trade and Industry
25 February 1998	Mary Harney Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Enterprise and Employment	London
Minister for Trade
11 January 1999	Tom Kitt Minister of State at the Department of Enterprise and Trade	Dublin
Minister for Industry and Energy
21 May 1999	Joe Jacobs Minister of State for Public Enterprise	Dublin

Irish officials attended as required by their Ministers.

Departmental Travel

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many kilometres have been travelled on his Department's business in each of the last three years broken down by (a) foot, (b) bike, (c) bus, (d) train, (e) tram, (f) light-rail, (g) plane, (h) motorbike, (i) car, (j) taxi, (k) river-taxi and (l) other modes of transport; what plans and targets his Department has to reduce the kilometres travelled by private transport by his Department's employees; and if he will make a statement. [91026]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 13 July 1999]: The information on business travel is not collected in the form requested and therefore cannot be provided.

Electronic Commerce

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans the Government have to promote electronic commerce. [93429]

Mr. Wills: The Government have set the ambitious goal of making the UK the best place in the world for electronic trading by 2002. The Government have been translating this vision into a reality, through a range of measures, culminating in today's publication of the draft Electronic Communications Bill. On 6 May 1999, Official Report, columns 446–47, I announced the terms for introducing third generation mobile phones, allowing high speed mobile access to the Internet, among other things. On 5 July I launched a consultation on licensing new radio spectrum to allow broadband wireless services to be offered across the country. On 6 July Oftel announced the opening up of BT's local network to enable broadband services to be available across the country. These measures will give us world-beating broadband access.

On 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 1342–55, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced the White Paper "Modern Markets, Confident Consumers". It offers a new deal for consumers, including core principles for e-commerce codes of conduct to promote consumer confidence in on-line shopping.

I am launching a consultation on the draft Electronic Communications Bill today. The draft Bill and the Government's response to the Trade and Industry Committee's recent report are published in a Command Paper—"Promoting Electronic Commerce". I have also published a summary of responses to our previous consultation. Copies of these documents have been placed in the Vote Office and are available on the DTI website at http://www/dti.gov.uk/cii/elec/ecbill.html. I am asking for comments on the draft Bill by 8 October and the Government will then introduce a Bill to Parliament in the next session.

The Bill will put in place a light-touch legal framework to allow electronic commerce to flourish. The Bill establishes conclusively that all electronic signatures, however produced and of whatever form, are admissible in Court. The Bill also provides for the modernising of the statute book, to remove legal barriers to using electronic means, as an alternative to pen and paper. The power will help modernise dealings with Government and allow the electronic option for other transactions constrained by statute. The Bill will do this by giving the relevant Minister the power to amend existing legislation by Statutory Instrument.

I am pleased to announce that the DTI intends to use this power to amend the Companies Act 1985 to enable companies to use electronic means to deliver company communications, including sending annual reports to shareholders, to receive shareholder proxy and voting instructions and to incorporate. Savings on the printing and distribution of Annual Reports and accounts alone could amount up to £10 for every shareholder who participates.

The Bill will promote confidence in electronic signature and other cryptography services. Such services allow people to ensure that their credit card details and other personal information cannot be read by others when they shop on-line. They allow businesses to protect their intellectual property and stop sensitive information being read by competitors. They will also, by allowing the verification of who is at the other end of an electronic communications, give confidence to those conducting business with companies they have not dealt with before. An approval scheme, for those delivering these services, would build trust, both in the technology and the bodies offering it, by ensuring that minimum standards of quality and service are met.

The Government have been working closely with the Alliance for Electronic Business who are leading the development of a non-statutory, self-regulatory scheme. Such a scheme bringing together providers and users, including consumers, should offer a more flexible and effective way of meeting the Government's objectives than a statutory scheme. The Alliance's scheme is still in its infancy, so the draft Bill proposes to take powers to set up a statutory voluntary scheme by secondary legislation. The Government will only use these powers should the industry fail to work out a suitable model for self-regulation consistent with our e-commerce and law enforcement interests.

In seeking to promote electronic commerce, it is also vital that the Government ensure that the ability of the agencies tasked with combating crime and threats to national security is not critically undermined by criminal use of the very technologies, such as encryption, which are needed to make the electronic commerce revolution happen, and which the Bill seeks to promote. By way of addressing this threat, the proposed Bill establishes new powers to enable the agencies to require the surrender of decryption keys or specified data in an intelligible form in response to the service of a properly authorised written notice. The powers will operate on a case by case basis and will only apply to material which itself has been, or is being, lawfully obtained. The procedures contain strong safeguards. The Bill also establishes oversight and complaints mechanisms covering use of the new powers.

The Bill will also introduce a more flexible process for amending existing Telecommunication Act 1984 licences, a deregulatory measure which will reduce the need for costly references to the Competition Commission.

The Bill will be a light-touch framework for facilitating electronic commerce, building on the UK's traditional strengths including our history as a trading nation, our dynamic IT industries, the City, the English language, our framework of commercial law, our inventiveness and our competitive telecommunications environment.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date (a) he and (b) the Lord Chancellor last used a train in the course of their official duties. [92662]

Mr. Vaz: In accordance with the terms of the Ministerial Code, Ministers are required always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. Trips in and around London, which account for the majority of my working week, will normally be made by Government Car. Since being appointed Parliamentary Secretary on 17 May I have not had reason to travel by train in the course of my official duties. The Lord Chancellor last used a train on Friday 16 July when he travelled to Cambridge to speak at the Canadian Institute for Advanced Legal Studies Annual Conference.

Magistrates Courts

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Government intend to publish the Annual Report of the Chief Inspector of the Magistrates Courts Service; and if he will make a statement on the modernisation of magistrates courts. [93262]

Mr. Vaz: Copies of the Chief Inspector's Annual Report have today been placed in the Library of both Houses. The Annual Report records the significant achievements of the local Magistrates Courts Committees in rising to the challenges of this Government's modernisation agenda.

The programme of amalgamating local Courts Committees to align their boundaries with others in the criminal justice system is on tract, leading to better planning and communication between agencies; and local Courts Committees are becoming more accountable and more business like in their approach to performance management and improving the efficiency of their administration of the courts.

The Chief Inspector highlights areas for improvements in the future. The Lord Chancellor's Department is providing the national framework to support Committees in their administration of local justice into the next millennium. Local Committees have, for the first time, been set performance targets in a Public Service Agreement for 1999–2000. The Lord Chancellor has increased their accountability to their local community by requiring Committees to produce an Annual Report covering key areas of performance.

The Access to Justice Bill provides new powers for the Lord Chancellor to introduce a Code of Conduct for Committee members, maintaining the highest standards in public life. The Lord Chancellor has also taken powers to ensure that specific recommendations made by the Inspectorate are implemented, intervening where the service provided in an area is falling short.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Maths Examinations (Special Needs)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what special arrangements will be made for those required to sit a maths paper for which the use of calculators is forbidden at GCSE who suffer from dyslexia or other specific difficulties. [92728]

Mr. Mudie: Special arrangements are operated by the examining boards with special needs. The special arrangements provide for additional examination time to be made available to candidates with dyslexia and other learning difficulties giving them more time to read the paper and to plan and correct their answers.

University Engineering Courses

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students are currently taking engineering courses at universities in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [92289]

Mr. Mudie: Figures for 1998–99 show there are approximately 120,000 people sudying engineering and technology subjects in UN universities.

The Government recognise the importance of engineering and technology to he UK economy, place high value on education in these disciplines and are seeking to encourage more people to study in these areas.

Bolton Schools (Damage)

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools in the Bolton area were damaged by (a) vandalism and (b) arson during each of the last five years; what was the cost to the education authority of this damage; if he will make a statement. [92287]

Ms Estelle Morris: Most schools in Bolton have been subject to some form of vandalism such as broken windows and guttering over the last three years. Some 50 arson attacks have been reported over the last five years with some schools being subjected to more than one incident.

Bolton LEA have provided the available information on the cost to the Authority of vandalism and arson attacks:

Year	Vandalism	Arson
1998–99	32,518	275,000
1997–98	46,748	239,000
1996–97	45,820	829,000
1995–96	[1]—	74,000
1994–95	[1]—	53,000

[1] not available

Since 1997–98 the Government has made funding available to support measures to improve security in schools, including measures to reduce the incidence of crime against schools. In the last three years Bolton LEA has had over £370,000 of support from Government grant and the LEA's own contributions for expenditure on school security measures. This is in addition to the continuing revenue and capital spending by the LEA and school on school security. The decisions about detailed arrangements for the distribution of the grant and for assessing needs in individual schools will be for the LEA, on the basis of risk assessments undertaken in individual schools. This should reflect priorities in school and LEA security strategies.

Teachers (State Schools)

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people aged 40 years and over have trained since 1994 to become teachers and are now employed in state schools; and if he will make a statement. [92290]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table shows teachers who qualified in 1994, 1995 and 1996, when aged 40 or above, and those in service in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector in England and Wales at 31 March 1997.

[2] Data are provisional. The numbers shown as in service will increase as a result of late receipt of annual service returns.

Concordat (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish, before the summer adjournment, the most recent draft concordat between his Department and the National Assembly for Wales. [92332]

Mr. Mudie: Work on the concordat is proceeding well. We hope to be in a position to put a draft concordat to the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales shortly. We do not intend to publish the concordat in advance of that.

Teachers (Retirement)

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school teachers took early retirement in each year since 1993. [91931]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows early retirement from the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector, England and Wales, in financial years 1992–93 to 1998–99.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school pupils have been (i) temporarily and (ii) permanently excluded from school; and what proportion of each were from ethnic minorities in each London borough over the last five years. [91784]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on fixed period exclusions is not held centrally. However, in the autumn, my Department will begin collecting this information for the current school year, 1998–99. Information available on permanent exclusions is shown in the table.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many individuals his Department has recruited under the New Deal for Young People. [91890]

Mr. Andrew Smith: As at 1 July 1999 the Department for Education and Employment had recruited 13, and the Employment Service 362, young people through the New Deal for Young People.

I would also refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 116.

Education Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 28 June 1999, Official Report, columns 56–58, on education initiatives, if he will list for each initiative, the amount spent by his Department on external consultants and advisers. [91820]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 21 July 1999]: The amounts spent by the Department of Education and Employment on external consultants and advisers for the initiatives listed in columns 56–58, are given in the following table. The amounts spent on School Leadership include the cost of consultants previously contracted by the Teacher Training Agency to design the model for the delivery of the Leadership Programme for Serving Headteachers (LPSH), provide trainers to run the pilot programme, and to train over 170 trainers for the full LPSH programme. The figures for the literacy and numeracy strategies include the services of two National Directors, to provide advice on the strategic policy development of the two strategies, and the cost of Regional Directors to aid in the support, monitoring and implementation of the strategies by local education authorities, including the professional development of local education authority staff and teachers.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 167, on school playing fields, what was the research carried out by the Central Council of Physical Recreation which was used by his Department. [92128]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The research referred to in my Answer of 13 July consisted of two national surveys carried out by the Central Council of Physical Recreation and reported in their September 1984 publication, "Sports Fields at Risk." This research found that 3,630 acres of recreational land were subject to disposal. This is equivalent to approximately 5,000 playing fields.

The research also noted that the actual number of school playing fields which have been lost to sport and recreation over the years is likely to be higher than this figure.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which TA recruitment centre has the lowest level of recruitment in Wales; [82269]

(2) which TA centres in Wales have the highest levels of (a) recruitment and (b) retention. [82270]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 27 June 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87321]

Mr. Spellar: According to our records 129 written Parliamentary Questions were tabled to my Department for answer on a named day between 15 April and 15 June. Of these, 50 per cent. received a substantive response on that day.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions Ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998 indicating the dates and locations, the Ministers involved and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials in each case. [87429]

Mr. George Robertson: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State received a farewell call from Lt Gen Gerald McMahon, Chief of Staff, Irish Defence Force, on 10 August 1998.

Disabled People (Employment)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on his policy on the employment of disabled people in the armed forces; [88368]

(2) how many registered disabled people work in (a) civilian and (b) uniformed posts in the Ministry of Defence; and if he will make a statement. [88367]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 28 June 1999]: My Department and its agencies employ some 3,780 civilian staff who have declared a disability or a long-term health condition in response to disability monitoring surveys. This represents some 3.7 per cent. of the total civilian workforce.

Data about registered disabled people are no longer requested in surveys because the register of disabled persons ceased to have effect with the introduction of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. We fully recognise the valuable contribution disabled people can make towards the achievement of defence objectives and, as part of our efforts to increase their representation in our civilian workforce, we have a three-year programme of action in place aimed at improving our performance as an employer of people with disabilities.

Members of the Armed Forces are exempt from the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act. Disability or a history of disability is not compatible with the need for a combat effective fighting force, able to undertake a full range of military operations anywhere in the world. Service personnel disabled during the course of duty are, depending on circumstances, allowed to continue to serve as long as such service will not undermine overall combat effectiveness. This approach reflects the Services' duty of care to the individual and allows them to benefit from the individual's experience and ensure a return on their training investment.

Army (Medical Refusals)

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the medical grounds on the basis of which admission to the Army may be refused; and if he will give the reasons in each case. [90420]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Army, in common with the Naval Service and the Royal Air Force, applies medical standards that entrants must meet. I am placing a copy of the medical standards in the Library of the House.

Medical selection criteria are imposed to ensure, as far as possible, the ability of recruits to undertake military training and to operate in all Service environments, many of which may be hostile. Furthermore, the armed forces have a duty of care to avoid causing deleterious effects on any pre-existing condition which would be detrimental to the long term health and welfare of the individual. The bar on certain medical conditions also exists to minimise any liabilities which could arise from allowing individuals with known medical conditions into environments which have a high risk of adverse outcome for them.

Service Personnel (Council Tax)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the regulations for payment of council tax by service personnel; and if he will make a statement. [91569]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Service personnel living in private accommodation pay council tax under the same arrangements as civilians.

When occupying service accommodation service personnel pay my Department a Contribution in Lieu of Council Tax (CILOCT) as part of their accommodation charge. My Department then pays the relevant local authority an annual sum equivalent to the council tax for properties of the type occupied.

These arrangements have been put in place to minimise administration for local authorities and individuals, that would otherwise be necessary in view of the fact that service personnel and their families are often necessarily obliged to move house to meet service obligations.

Leave Entitlement

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new regulations he has introduced about leave entitlement following postings outside the UK; and if he will make a statement. [91567]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On 19 July we announced the rationalisation of our forces in Kosovo, and are also introducing a number of welfare enhancements for personnel serving on operations in the Balkans and elsewhere. Among these is a guaranteed period of leave when personnel return from operational detachment. In the case of the Army, for instance, personnel who have completed a six month detachment will receive 20 working days post operational tour leave over and above their normal leave allowance.

Personnel in the other services will also be given extra time off, the period being governed by the time spent on detachment and the conditions under which they have worked. This will ensure that personnel returning from operations can spend time with their families and be fully rested before undertaking further duties.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91686]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Women, on 14 July 1999, Official Report, House of Lords, column 636.

As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that its policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working closely with the Women's Unit to develop good practices for carrying out gender impact appraisal.

We have no historical records of gender impact assessments undertaken to date.

Future Large Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors he will take into account in his decision on the procurement of a future large aircraft capability; and if he will make a statement. [92083]

Mr. George Robertson: As with all defence procurement projects, we will be taking a range of factors into account when making a decision on our future strategic airlift capability. These include performance, long-term cost effectiveness and industrial implications.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements the Government have made to monitor the transport of nuclear materials (a) in the European Union and (b) internationally. [91694]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 20 July 1999]: My Department monitors all movements of defence nuclear materials, for which it is responsible. All movements of such materials are carried out by fully trained and equipped personnel in accordance with the highest standards of safety and security.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Ministry of Defence sites that were surveyed by English Nature in the 1994 national Sites of Special Scientific Interest sample survey of lowland heathland, indicating in each case the condition and area of the site. [92212]

Mr. Spellar: The national Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) sample survey of lowland heathland was one of several pilot surveys undertaken by English Nature to develop a methodology for determining the condition of habitats on SSSIs, based on a sample of sites. The sample survey undertaken in 1994 and 1995 covered 93 lowland heathland SSSIs out of a possible 385 sites.

A number of sites owned or used by the Ministry of Defence (MOD) were included in this survey.

[1] In 1998, the Defence Evaluation Research Agency Farnborough Conservation Group received an English Nature SSSI award for commitment to the positive management of the Eelmoor Marsh SSSI.

RAF Scampton

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the future of RAF Scampton. [92468]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Naval Dockyards

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (i) name, (ii) length, (iii) weight, (iv) type, and (v) displacement of the largest ship to have docked at the (a) Portsmouth Naval Base and Dockyards, (b) Rosyth Dockyard and (c) Devonport Dockyard; and if he will make statement. [92372]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information requested is in the table. Accurate records are available only for the last 15 years.

[1] Portsmouth Dockyard ceased to be a fully fledged dockyard in 1984. The Fleet Maintenance Repair Organisation (FMRO) became its successor organisation. FMRO Portsmouth transferred to commercial management on 28 February 1998.
[2] Information for Devonport Naval Base has been included for completeness.

Royal Tournament

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 426, on the Royal Tournament, when the first Military Festival to be performed in Colchester is planned to take place; and how many performances there will be. [92630]

Mr. George Robertson: The first military festival will be based on the Royal Navy's Festival of the Sea to be held in 2001 at Portsmouth. No decision has yet been taken as to where it will be held thereafter.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 426, on the Royal Tournament, what will be the principal differences between the Military Tattoo to be staged at Horse Guards Parade and the Military Festival to be held outside London. [92628]

Mr. George Robertson: The new military tattoo will be an evening event on Horse Guards Parade in London. It will build on the traditions of the Royal Tournaments, involving ceremonial, massed bands and pageantry. The new military festival will be an all-day experience, enabling spectators to see a wide range of military activities, view the latest military equipment, meet personnel and participate in interactive displays. It will be held at varying locations outside London, starting in 2001 at Portsmouth.

TREASURY

Landfill Tax

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue his Department has received from the landfill tax in each of the last five years. [92025]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested can be found in the Office for National Statistics publication "Financial Statistics". Table 2.1D "Customs and Excise taxes" shows figures for receipts from landfill tax.

Landfill tax was introduced on 1 October 1996.

Social Security Contributions

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the forecast levels of social security contributions for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales, for each of the next three years. [92643]

Dawn Primarolo: The Budget forecast for social security contributions in 1999–2000 in the United Kingdom is £55.7 billion. The figure is shown in Table B10 of the Budget 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report. Forecasts of social security contributions as a percentage of GDP for subsequent years up to 2003–04 are shown in Table B9 of the same publication. The corresponding forecasts of money GDP are shown in Table B4. Separate figures for Scotland and Wales are not available.

NIRS2

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount which has been paid by his Department since April 1998 in compensation for delays to payment of age-related rebates of national insurance contributions arising from problems with the NIRS2 computer system. [92482]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Responsibility for the NIRS computer system transferred from the Department of Social Security to the Inland Revenue on 1 April 1999.

The estimate for the amount of additional payments, since April 1998, for delays to payment of age-related rebates of national insurance contributions arising from problems with the NIRS2 computer system is £32.7 million.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the final total cost to the Exchequer of the problems associated with the NIRS2 computer system. [92483]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Responsibility for the NIRS2 computer system transferred from the Department of Social Security to the Inland Revenue on 1 April 1999.

The estimated cost of additional payments to 1 July 1999 is £34.686 million. This includes additional payments to Pension Providers for the delay in the payment of age related rebates (£32.7 million).

Other additional payments (£76,000) have been made to individuals and corporate customers in relation to minor difficulties they have encountered with NIRS2.

Compensation paid to benefit recipients by the Department of Social Security amounted to £1.85 million at 1 July 1999.

Costs associated with contingency processing plans, contingency arrangements and the provision of information have been met from the existing administration budgets of both the DSS and IR.

The present programme of work, to deal with backlogs, is intended to avoid the need for such payments or keep them to a minimum.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff at the Contributions Agency aged 60 years or over have been required to retire since April. [92200]

Dawn Primarolo: Between 1 April and 31 July 1999, 126 former Contributions Agency staff are due to retire, 18 at 60 and 108 after service beyond 60.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have been made to the terms and conditions affecting Contributions Agency staff aged 60 years or over since April. [92201]

Dawn Primarolo: The normal retirement age for Contributions Agency (CA) staff was 60, and staff of the Inland Revenue also have a normal retirement age of 60. During negotiations on the terms and conditions of service on which agency staff would join the Revenue, the Revenue promised to honour the transitional arrangements the CA had agreed when it changed its retirement policy. Accordingly, the Revenue agreed to honour all extensions of service to 31 July 1999. This was part of the [redacted]le terms and conditions package published to CA staff in February 1999 and accepted by a majority vote in the subsequent ballot.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) weekly and (b) monthly paid people in the United Kingdom, are estimated to earn in excess of (a) £20,000 (b) £25,000 and (c) £50,000 per annum. [92286]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Crausby, dated 23 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on earnings in the United Kingdom.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) is based on a one per cent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold and in particular those who work part-time. However, this limitation is unlikely to affect those earning above £20,000 per annum.

The attached table gives estimates of the percentage of weekly and monthly paid employees in the UK with earnings above the specified thresholds.

Limb Deficiency

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what statistics his Department collects on the number of children born with limb deficiency; and if he will list the figures for the last three years. [92306]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Mark Oaten, dated 23 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on limb deficiency.

The ONS collects information through the National Congenital Anomaly System. This system, which is voluntary at all stages, has been monitoring congenital anomalies in England and Wales since 1964. The primary purpose of this system is to detect changes in the frequency of reporting of any particular anomaly rather than trying to estimate the prevalence at birth.

The following table shows babies notified with limb reduction defects*, numbers and rates per 10,000 live and stillbirths, England and Wales 1995–1997.

Population Statistics

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the population in each parliamentary constituency live in settlements of less than 10,000 people. [92725]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tim Yeo, dated 23 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your question asking what percentage of the population in each parliamentary constituency live in settlements of less than 10,000 people.

Mid-year population estimates are not compiled for areas such as parliamentary constituencies or smaller settlements. The lowest level at which these are available is the local authority level.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

M6 (Markings)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the purpose of the new markings set out in the manner of a Vernier scale on the M6 motorway. [92502]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 23 July 1999:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson, has asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Lawrie Haynes, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about markings on the M6 motorway. I am replying on Lawrie's behalf in his absence.

The markings are put down on the carriageway when speed cameras are used on major maintenance schemes to help enforce a temporary 50mph speed limit. They enable the police to calculate traffic speeds that can then be used to back up recorded radar measurements.

Although the markings in themselves do not represent a hazard and the police do not object to their remaining on the carriageway, we do try to remove them once the work has been completed. However, where the new type of low noise thin surfacing is used, it is difficult to remove the markings without damaging the surface. For future projects we are trying a new type of removable paint which when applied to the marking allows them to be washed away.

If you need any further information, please contact the Agency's Route Manager, Howard Woolley at Sunley Tower, Piccadilly Plaza, Manchester M1 4BE—Tel: 0161 930 5680.

House Builders

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions the NHBC has taken court action against (a) Redrow and (b) other house builders over the past five years. [92496]

Mr. Raynsford: The NHBC is an independent private sector company and, with the exception of certain housing statistical returns provided by its subsidiary, NHBC Building Control Services Ltd., it does not report to my right hon. Friend on its day-to-day operations.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government have taken to ensure the favourable conservation status of special areas of conservation. [92797]

Mr. Meale: The Conservation (Natural Habitats, &c.) Regulations 1994 transpose the requirements of the EC Habitats Directive in England, Scotland and Wales. The Directive requires that member states should nominate Special Areas of Conservation (SACs) which are the best areas to represent the range and variety of the habitats and species identified by the Directive.

The Government have recently announced that a virtually complete list of 340 wildlife sites nominated for special protection as candidate SACs under the Habitats Directive has been submitted to the European Commission.

It is a matter of Government policy that the Regulations should be applied to candidate sites as if the sites were already designated, and they are given the full protection of the Regulations to ensure their favourable condition. These sites are given the highest priority for conservation action by the nature conservation agencies.

Limestone Pavement

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the extent of trade within the UK of limestone pavement; what amount is traded with other European Union countries; and if the Government will ban trade in limestone pavements. [92798]

Mr. Meale: The Limestone Pavement Biodiversity Action Plan Working Group, chaired by the Countryside Agency, has commissioned research into the extent and nature of trade in waterworn limestone. In the light of the report the Group will be advising Ministers whether a ban on trade is feasible.

In the meantime the Department fully supports the activities of the Limestone Pavement Action Group in seeking to discourage the sale and purchase of waterworn limestone.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made towards completing the Limestone Pavement Order process under section 34 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for England, Scotland and Wales; and when the process is expected to be completed. [92796]

Mr. Meale: The Yorkshire Dales National Park Authority recently made seven further Limestone Pavement Orders (LPO), bringing the total in England to 92, and proposes to make a further seven in 1999. It is, therefore expected that all pavements in England will be protected under section 34 by the end of this year.

Scottish Natural Heritage will be considering making use of this provision. Information about important localities in Wales is being passed to local authorities. Several local authorities are considering making LPOs under section 34.

The making of LPOs in Scotland and Wales is a matter for the authorities there.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the GM crops being tested in pre-commercial farm-scale trials, which contain antibiotic resistant marker genes, giving details of the marker genes concerned in each case. [92723]

Mr. Meale: None of the genetically modified (GM) crops being grown under the joint Government/SCIMAC farm-scale evaluations contain functional antibiotic resistant marker genes.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is the Government's policy to seek an amendment of EC Directive 90/220/EEC so that companies with marketing consents for genetically modified crops must inform the relevant local authority of their intention to plant genetically modified crops in their area. [82261]

Mr. Meale: The Government strongly support the revision of Council Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) on which political agreement was reached at the recent EU Environment Council. The political agreement did not include provision that companies with marketing consents for genetically modified (GM) crops must inform the relevant local authority of their intention to plant GM crops in their area. However, the agreement does provide for mandatory consultation of the public on all releases. Provisions require the Commission to make all summary notifications for applications to place GMOs on the market and assessment reports available to the public, which has the right to comment within 30 days. Assessment reports and the opinions of the Scientific Committees for all consents issued and rejected must also be made available to the public.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has commissioned or evaluated on the effects of herbicide-tolerant and insect-resistant genetically-modified crops on the environment; and if he will make a statement. [92712]

Mr. Meale: DETR carries out extensive research on the environmental impact of genetically modified (GM) crops. Two important recent reports are, "The Commercial use of Genetically Modified Crops in the United Kingdom: the Potential Wider Impact on Farmland Wildlife", that includes consideration of the environmental effects of both herbicide tolerant and insect resistant GM crops and "Environmental Risks of Herbicide Tolerant Oilseed Rape". Copies of both reports are in the Library.

The farm-scale evaluations—announced in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 15 April 1999, Official Report, columns 301–02—are investigating whether there are any differences in the diversity and abundance of wildlife associated with the management of genetically modified (GM) herbicide tolerant oil seed rape and maize compared with the management of equivalent conventional crops.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received about the effect of genetically-modified pollen on butterfly survival rates. [92632]

Mr. Meale: My Department is aware of the potential risks of genetically modified (GM) insect resistant crops to non-target and beneficial organisms, and we are funding research to investigate these. This research will underpin future regulatory decision making.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for Environment reported in his reply to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 24 May 1999, Official Report, column 8, that the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) had been asked to give consideration to the report in Nature about the possible adverse effects of pollen from genetically modified insect resistant maize on the Monarch Butterfly in America. ACRE concluded that the laboratory studies presented in the article are preliminary and that more work needs to be done, particularly to study the effects under field conditions. Despite the questions remaining about the study, the results do suggest that Bt pollen from the genetically modified maize is harmful to Monarch butterfly larvae under the laboratory conditions tested, although this may not necessarily reflect what actually happens in the natural environment.

This study alone does not justify any immediate action in the UK. There are currently no Bt crops being grown here and none will be for the next three years. The issues raised in the Nature article will be kept under review by ACRE and no GM crops will be given approval if there is reason to believe the pollen would harm the environment.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has commissioned or evaluated on the impact of gene escape from genetically modified crops on wild plants; and if he will make a statement. [92708]

Mr. Meale: DETR carries out extensive research on the environmental impact of genetically modified (GM) crops. Two important recent reports dealing with gene transfer from GM crops to wild relatives are "The Commercial use of Genetically Modified Crops in the United Kingdom: the Potential Wider Impact on Farmland Wildlife", and "Environmental Risks of Herbicide Tolerant Oilseed Rape". Copies of both reports are in the Library. Ongoing research commissioned by MAFF on pollen transfer will be published when the work is complete.

Local Transport Plans

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to give statutory force to local transport plans. [91529]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We believe that there would be advantages in making local transport plans statutory and propose to legislate in due course.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what policy the UK Government are adopting with respect to the revision of EC Directive 90/220/EEC on the release of genetically modified organisms into the environment; and if he will make a statement. [88723]

Mr. Meacher: The Government strongly support the revision of Council Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) on which political agreement was reached at the recent EU Environment Council. Details of the political agreement are given in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 6 July 1999, Official Report, columns 438–40.

GM Farms (Health and Safety Inspections)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many HSE visits to GM farm scale trial sites were unannounced as a proportion of the total number of visits for each year since the trials started; and if he will make a statement. [87863]

Mr. Meale: No unannounced HSE visits have been undertaken. The first GM farm scale trials were planted in the spring of 1999 and are not yet at the stage when appropriate inspection could be undertaken.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what checks HSE inspectors undertake when they visit GM farm scale trial sites; and if he will make a statement. [87861]

Mr. Meale: Under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1997 (as amended) HSE inspectors review each release site visited in the light of the specific requirements imposed in the relevant consent.

Some of the important areas against which compliances are assessed include:

Location of the site against the notified grid references;

Isolation of the crop from other specified species and protected habitats;

Size and format of the trial;

Accuracy and currency of location specific information supplied at approval stage in support of the environmental risk assessment.

All specific consent details are available on the Public Register, held by Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions at Ashdown House, 123 Victoria Street, London SW1E 6DE.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date (a) he and (b) the Minister for Transport last used a train in the course of their official duties. [92660]

Mrs. Liddell: Ministers travel by public transport on a regular basis on official visits and journeys to their offices.

Ministers are required under the Ministerial Code to always make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements.

Transport Council

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when is the next EC Council of Transport Ministers' meeting; and what will be on the agenda. [92506]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The next EC Transport Council will take place on 6 October in Luxembourg. The agenda will not be confirmed until shortly before the Council, but it is expected that the agenda will include the following topics:

Strategy for integration of environmental considerations into transport policy (Report to Helsinki European Council)

Galileo satellite navigation project

Roadside inspection of roadworthiness of commercial vehicles

Package of proposals on railways

Harmonised rules for driving restrictions on heavy goods vehicles

Registration and use of certain recertificated jet aircraft.

M4 Bus Lane

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the M4 bus lane will move from pilot to full operational phase. [91483]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 15 July 1999]: The bus lane is fully operational. It is making journeys for all vehicles quicker. Buses and taxis are making savings of over three minutes (30 per cent.) during the morning and evening peak periods. In a period of severe congestion caused by an accident elsewhere buses using the bus lane were sixteen minutes quicker than other vehicles. On average cars are achieving savings of one minute (10 per cent.) during the morning peak period and two and a half minutes (25 per cent.) during the evening peak.

Overall the bus lane and its associated speed limits have increased the maximum capacity of the M4 in this location by up to 10 per cent. at peak times. This benefits all vehicles.

Wembley

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when the shadow Wembley Task Force will be formally constituted; [91702]

(2) what consultation the Wembley Task Force has had with (a) local community stakeholders, (b) Brent Council and (c) local community and business organisations. [91700]

Mr. Raynsford: No Task Force has been constituted for Wembley. As I said in response to my hon. Friend on 24 June 1999, Official Report, columns 443–45, the Wembley Park Regeneration Partnership has secured Single Regeneration Budget funding of £15,255,000 towards a seven year programme for the Business Park there. Other work aimed at ensuring maximum impact and benefits flow from the redevelopment of Wembley Stadium is currently underway although, being essentially a sporting-related venture, the Department of Culture Media and Sport is taking lead responsibility. Proposals covering the wider regeneration interests involving a range of bodies and interests, including Government Office London, English Partnerships as facilitator, Brent Council and local community and business interests are under development. The Government hope to be able to announce further details soon.

Void Council Properties

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of council-owned properties in (a) Salisbury district, (b) North Dorset district, (c) New Forest district, (d) Kennet district and (e) Test Valley district were declared void in 1998. [91795]

Mr. Raynsford: As reported by them on their respective Housing Investment Programme (HIP) Operational Information returns, 2.7 per cent. of council-owned properties were vacant within Salisbury District Council area on 1 April 1998, 0.6 per cent. in New Forest and 0.5 per cent. in Test Valley. There is likely to be some variation in the proportion of dwellings that are vacant in a local authority from one date to another during the year.

North Dorset and Kennet District Councils no longer own residential properties, having transferred their housing stock to the private sector in 1994 and 1995 respectively.

Rents

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for the latest year available the (i) average market rent for a (a) one, (b) two and (c) three bed property in the private rented sector, (ii) local reference rent and (iii) single room rent in each London borough. [91779]

Mr. Raynsford: Statistics of average market rents for all private rented stock are not available for individual London boroughs.

Average weekly local reference rents and single room rents in 1998 for housing benefit referrals of private rented stock in each London borough are as set out in the tables.

Right to Buy

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tenants exercised the right-to-buy their property in (a) Enfield, (b) Greater London and (c) Great Britain in each of the last five years; and in each case what was the cost to public funds of the discounts. [92018]

Mr. Raynsford: The table presents the latest information on the number of sales of council dwellings reported by local authorities in England. Not all authorities have provided full returns so the figures for Greater London and England are estimates to take account of missing returns.

Sales of council dwellings

	Enfield	Greater London	England
1994–95	176	6,363	43,336
1995–96	110	4,641	31,512
1996–97	118	5,220	33,206
1997–98	172	7,123	41,329
1998–99	163	n/a	n/a

A typical right-to-buy sale results in a net loss of around £10,000 in "net present value" terms. This includes the loss of rent and the need to eventually replace rented housing sold under the scheme. The net loss is largely due to the discount to which a tenant is entitled. Our consultation paper "Secure tenants' right to buy" published on 28 July 1998 (in particular paragraphs 8–10) set this out in detail, together with our proposals to reduce the cost by changing the discount rules. These proposals were implemented on 11 February. A copy of the paper is in the Library of the House.

Public Transport

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the amount of Government capital investment in public transport in (a) the West Midlands and (b) London in each year since 1992; and what forecast he has made of investment levels for each year of the planning period. [92133]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' Departmental Investment Strategy, published in April 1999, set out the major elements of public sector investment anticipated as a result of the resources allocated to the Department following the comprehensive spending review. The following table illustrates expected capital investment generated through and related to DETR programmes and policies for railways and local transport in all areas, and London Transport. Investment prior to 1998–99 is given as an average figure.

Transport Plan Appraisals

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if major schemes in local transport plans will require appraisal of alternatives using the New Approach to Appraisal. [92213]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our guidance on provisional local transport plans requires the appraisal of the whole provisional plan using a simplified Appraisal Summary Table (AST). The simplified AST is derived from the New Approach to Appraisal. Where the provisional local transport plan includes a major road or public transport scheme simplified ASTs are also required for an alternative strategy without the major scheme. This process identifies the contribution of the major scheme to the overall plan.

Simplified ASTs will also be required to show the impact on the plan of any additional alternative strategies that are tested.

In addition to the appraisal of the impact on the provisional plan, the major transport scheme itself will also be subject to scrutiny. For provisional plans, major road schemes will be assessed using the existing New Approach to Appraisal. Major public transport schemes will be appraised using current Section 56 requirements. We intend to have a multi-modal version of the New Approach to Appraisal in place in time for the assessment of full local transport plans next year.

A1

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the capacity of the A1 Newcastle Western bypass from the Gateshead Metrocentre Interchange to the Ponteland Road Interchange. [92226]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 23 July 1999:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Lawrie Haynes, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question. You asked "What plans he has to increase the capacity of the A1 Newcastle Western Bypass from the Gateshead Metrocentre Interchange to the Ponteland Road Interchange." I am replying in Lawrie's absence from the office.

In advance of any recommendations from the Tyneside Area Study announced in 'A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England', the Highways Agency is looking at a variety of measures aimed at improving safety and reducing congestion on Gateshead and Newcastle Western Bypasses. These could include, variable message signs to warn drivers of problems ahead, closed circuit television cameras to monitor conditions, variable speed limits to improve the flow of traffic at busy times and rapid response breakdown vehicles to prevent, as far as possible, congestion from building up following an incident. We are pursuing the banning of certain slow moving vehicles at peak times.

We will be developing a rolling programme of worthwhile measures to be carried out in the next few years.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to dispose of land held for the widening of the A1 between Scotch Corner and the junction with the A1/M1 Link; when such land disposal was approved; and if he will state the total area of land involved. [92227]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Highways Agency currently owns 10 pieces of land or property bought in connection with the proposed widening of the A1 between Scotch Corner and the junction with the A1/M1 Link.

It is currently seeking to sell five of these plots, bought for the A1(M) Dishforth to Leeming and the A1(M) Bramham to Wetherby schemes. These schemes were withdrawn from the trunk road programme in 1996; and the decision to sell was taken shortly after that, when route protection was withdrawn.

The Highways Agency is also selling one plot that was bought in connection with the A1(M) Walshford to Dishforth improvement but was not required for the scheme. The decision to sell was taken in 1997 following completion of the road works in that area.

The other four plots, bought in connection with the A1(M) Leeming to Scotch Corner scheme, are being retained because they are directly affected by the extant Orders for that scheme.

The total area of land involved is about 52 acres, of which around 49 acres are being sold.

Northern Development Area

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the Highways Agency has agreed to support the plans for the Northern Development Area at the Inquiry called by the Secretary of State; and if he will estimate the Agency's costs of taking part in the Inquiry. [92229]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 23 July 1999:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Lawrie Haynes, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question. You asked "For what reasons the Highway Agency has agreed to support the plans for the Northern Development Area at the Inquiry called by the Secretary of State; and if he will estimate the Agency's costs of taking part in the Inquiry." I am replying in Lawrie's absence from the office.

I must make it clear that the Highways Agency will not be appearing at the Public Inquiry in order to advance a case in support of the grant of permission for the Northern Development Area. We have been called to appear before the Public Inquiry to address just one issue—the implications of the traffic generation from the proposed development, with particular reference to the effects of the A1 trunk road and the local highway network.

The Highways Agency's position is that the Northern Development Area will have a significant impact on the operation of the trunk road. However, prior to the Public Inquiry being arranged, the Highways Agency discussed with the developer what improvements to the trunk road would be needed to mitigate the effects of the development. Provided those agreed works are carried out, the Highways Agency has no reason to argue for the withholding of planning permission for the development.

On the subject of costs, the Agency has so far spent £26,750 on legal and consultants' fees. We anticipate spending a further £25,000 on such fees by the time the Inquiry is complete.

I hope this information is sufficient for your purposes.

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will respond to the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee Sixth report of Session 1998–99 on the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (HC. 31). [92205]

Mr. Prescott: We will respond once consultation within Government has finished.

English Partnerships

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list English Partnerships property portfolio in Cumbria; [91461]

(2) if the ownership of the freehold of the Cockermouth offices of English Partnerships will be vested in the North West Regional Development Agency. [91456]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 21 July 1999]: Details of the properties transferred from English Partnerships to the North West Regional Development Agency are contained in a transfer scheme made under section 36 of the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998. A copy of the relevant pars of the scheme has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, (1) pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 449, what estimate has been made of the additional costs of relocating English Partnerships offices from Cockermouth to Penrith in (a) this and (b) the next financial year; [91466]

(2) if he will publish (a) the information concerning the transfer of staff from the Cockermouth offices of English Partnerships offices to Penrith which was taken into account when the value for money aspects of the move were considered by the North West Regional Development Agency and (b) the report into the value for money aspects of the move which was considered by the Agency prior to the decision being taken; [91467]

(3) if the report into the value for money aspects of the move from Cockermouth to Penrith by English Partnerships was made available to the two members of the Regional Development Agency from Cumbria prior to the decision being (a) taken and (b) announced. [91468]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 21 July 1999]: Decisions concerning location are a matter for the North West Regional Development Agency. I understand that it was the objective of the Board of the Agency to find a location for its Cumbria office which was accessible both within Cumbria and from the rest of the North West region. The Board took the view that Penrith meets these criteria, whereas Cockermouth does not, and other locations do so less well.

I understand that the Board took into account the implications for staff travel costs set out in my answer to my hon. Friend on 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 449.

I understand that the Board Members from Cumbria were present during the discussion of the location of the Cumbria office and concurred both with the criteria to be applied and the choice of Penrith.

I understand that the additional cost of relocating from English Partnerships offices in Cockermouth to Penrith cannot be determined until negotiations are complete, but that in the Board's view the additional cost will be offset by increased public accessibility and operational efficiency.

Trains and Monorail Systems (London)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the use of (a) trains and (b) monorail systems in London. [92475]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We receive extensive correspondence on the use of trains in London, as elsewhere, but we receive representations on monorail systems only occasionally.

Emission Tests (London Boroughs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many London borough councils run emission tests of motor vehicles travelling within their borough. [92242]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Seven councils around Great Britain are currently helping us to determine how local authorities might be able to help in the enforcement of vehicle exhaust emissions standards at the roadside. Westminster City Council is the only authority in London formally involved in this work, although some others are checking vehicle emissions for motorists on a voluntary basis in car parks and similar locations.

Secure Stations Scheme

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of his Safer Stations Policy in London. [92402]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department's Secure Stations Scheme was launched in April 1998. The Scheme encourages rail operators to improve security for both passengers and staff at all overground and underground stations policed by the British Transport Police.

There are currently eight stations in London which have been accredited under the Scheme. We are continuing to work with station operators to make further progress with the Scheme.

Railway Agencies

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what new railway agencies were introduced in London during (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [92401]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Numerous new companies arose from railway privatisation, but with the possible exception of the Docklands Light Railway resulting from changes in company status, no new railway agencies were introduced in London over the period in question. The Office of the Rail Regulator (ORR) and the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising (OPRAF) were established following enactment of the Railways Act 1993. On 1 April 1999, we launched the Shadow Strategic Rail Authority (SSRA), which is essentially the British Railways Board (BRB) and OPRAF working together. OPRAF and the BRB continue to exist as separate statutory entities with their own functions and responsibilities. The remits of ORR and the SSRA include London. The legislation required to establish the Strategic Rail Authority proper was introduced into the House of Commons earlier this month and received its Second Reading on 19 July 1999, Official Report, columns 789–894.

The Docklands Light Railway Ltd. was created in 1986 as a company limited by guarantee to manage light rail services in east London. On 6 April 1997, operation and maintenance of the whole of DLR services was franchised for seven years to Docklands Railway Management Ltd., and the DLR assumed a new role as a holding company, ownership of which was transferred from London Docklands Development Corporation to the Secretary of State on 31 March 1998.

Bus Travel (London)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of people who travelled by bus in London in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [92427]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The estimated numbers of annual passenger journeys on London Transport bus services from 1995–96 onwards are as follows:

Year	Million
1995–96	1,198
1996–97	1,234
1997–98	1,277

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of passenger miles undertaken by London Transport bus services in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [92426]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The estimated numbers of annual passenger miles on London Transport bus services from 1995–96 onwards are as follows:

Year	Million
1995–96	2,497
1996–97	2,584
1997–98	2,703
1998–99	2,681

Millennium Pier

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Millennium Pier at the Dome site will be ready for river boat services. [92403]

Ms Glenda Jackson: River services are planned to commence operation to and from the Millennium Pier when the Dome opens on 1 January 2000.

Councillors (London)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many councillors were elected in 1998 for each London borough, broken down by gender and ethnicity. [92397]

Mr. Meale: The Local Government Management Board's 1997 census of councillors indicated that 230 out of 2,018 London Borough councillors who responded to this question were non-white. We do not have a breakdown for each London Borough for these figures.

The following table gives a breakdown of the gender ratios for the London Boroughs obtained by the Women's Unit last year:

Name of London borough	Number of women councillors	Percentage

Driving Licences

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency will not accept digitally produced photographs; and whether the unacceptability of such photographs will be made clear on DVLA application forms for photographic driving licences. [92406]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Digitally produced photographs are acceptable, provided they conform to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's requirements for photographs as prescribed on the appropriate application form.

Home Insulation

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many solid-walled properties have received publicly-funded assistance towards external wall insulation in each of the last five years. [92535]

Mr. Meale: Local authorities' programmes for maintaining and improving their social housing stock include external wall insulation. Local authorities also have powers to grant aid thermal insulation works under the house renovation grant system. Detailed figures are not available.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cavity-walled houses have received (a) Government and (b) local government assistance to have their walls insulated with cavity-wall insulation in each of the last five years. [92534]

Mr. Meale: The number of cavity-walled houses which have received Government assistance to have their walls insulated with cavity wall insulation since schemes began in 1996 are as follows:

	Number of installations
1996-1997	41,940
1997-1998	87,712
1998-99	120,595

The figure for 1998-1999 is not yet finalised.

Work by local authorities using Energy Saving Trust funds is included in the figures. Local authorities programmes for maintaining and improving their social housing stock include cavity wall insulation. Local authorities also have powers to grant aid thermal insulation works under the house renovation grant system. Detailed figures are not available.

Cycling (Leicestershire)

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress in the construction of cycle routes in (a) North West Leicestershire, (b) Leicestershire and (c) the United Kingdom; and what measures he is taking to encourage cycling. [91821]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The responsibility for providing cycling facilities rests with individual local highway authorities. Statistics on cycle routes are not available centrally.

We expect all local authorities to develop local cycling strategies as part of their local transport plans. Good progress is being made in implementing the National Cycling Strategy, although it will take time for better provision for cyclists to feed through fully.

In addition, the first 3,500 miles of the National Cycle Network, being co-ordinated by the cycle charity, Sustrans, will be completed by mid-summer 2000.

Homelessness (Leicestershire)

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of homeless people in (a) North West Leicestershire, (b) Leicestershire with Leicester and (c) the East Midlands; and if he will make a statement on his strategy to combat homelessness. [92187]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Local authorities in England report in their quarterly P1(E) returns the number of households accepted as unintentionally homeless and in priority need under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 and 1986 Housing Acts.

The latest available estimates are for the quarter ending March 1999, as follows[1]:

	Number	Number per thousand households
North West Leicestershire[2]	59	1.7
Other Leicestershire districts, including Leicester and Rutland unitary authorities	331	1.0
East Midlands region[2]	2,030	1.2

[1] Figure as reported

[2] Figures include estimates for non-responding authorities

My right hon. Friend, the Minister for Local Government and Housing, in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Ms Moran) on 19 May 1999, Official Report, columns 355–61, stated that at June 1998 there were 1,850 people sleeping rough in England on any single night. The answer included details from all local authority districts which had counted the number of rough sleepers in their district or estimated more than 10 people sleeping rough on any one night.

The central aim of our housing policy is to offer everyone the opportunity of a decent home and so promote social cohesion, well-being and self-dependence. The Government are committed to reducing all aspects of homelessness. Then making an additional £5 billion of resources available for investment in housing in England over the lifetime of this Parliament. The Government have a manifesto pledge to increase the protection for unintentionally homeless people in priority need. We are considering what further steps should be taken to achieve this.

The Government have also set a tough new target to reduce the numbers of rough sleepers by two thirds by 2002. The Rough Sleepers Unit headed by Louise Casey has an integrated budget of £145 million to tackle and prevent rough sleeping and a £34 million Homelessness Action Programme has also been established to tackle rough sleeping outside London.

National estimates for acceptances in each quarter, which include estimates for non-responding local authorities, appear in a quarterly Information Bulletin which is available in the Library. The latest figures, for the first quarter of 1999, were released on 16 June 1999. An associated Supplementary Table, showing the figures as reported by individual local authorities, is released with the Information Bulletin.

[1] Source of data = information on English local authorities' activities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1996 is collected on Part E of the quarterly P1(E) returns from local authorities. The information is collected on homeless households rather than homeless people and relates to households which were eligible, unintentionally homeless, and in priority need.

Health and Safety at Work, etc Act 1974

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people have received jail sentences under the Health and Safety at Work, etc Act 1974. [92698]

Mr. Meale: Four people have been sent to jail for health and safety at work offences, all since January 1996. The jail sentences related to unlicensed asbestos removal or failure to comply with prohibition notices. I welcome the message the courts have sent in these cases to anyone else who is tempted to flout health and safety law and put employees and members of the public at risk.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Correspondence

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average time for a substantive reply to be sent to hon. Members' correspondence; what proportion takes more than (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks; and what is his estimate of the number of letters received in a year from hon. Members. [92446]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 22 July 1999]: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06, which sets out performance against departmental targets for answering correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members, in the 1998 calender year. More detailed information about the percentage of correspondence replied to within the time scales specified could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Intervention Board

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Intervention Board will publish the 1998–99 Annual report and Accounts. [93494]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that the Intervention Board's 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 19 and 20 July; and if he will make a statement. [93044]

Mr. Nick Brown: I represented the United Kingdom at a meeting of the European Union Agriculture Council in Brussels on 19 July.

The Council received a report from Commissioner Fischler on the Commission's plans to reform Community feedingstuffs legislation following the dioxin contamination in Belgium. I welcomed this report and indicated my preparedness to support measures that were effective, proportionate and enforceable in dealing with potential health problems.

A Decision to update the rules on the processing of animal waste to protect against transmissible spongiform encephalopathies was agreed by qualified majority. An extension of certain deadlines under the Zoonoses Directive was agreed by qualified majority.

The Council held a preliminary discussion on a proposal to promote and provide information on EU agricultural products in third countries. The Council agreed to decide on the proposal once further technical work had been completed.

WALES

National Assembly for Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish, before the summer adjournment, the most recent draft concordat between his Department and the National Assembly for Wales. [92328]

Mr. Michael: Work on the concordat is proceeding well. I hope to be in a position to put a draft concordat to the Assembly Cabinet shortly. I do not intend to publish the concordat in advance of that. The Assembly will have full opportunity to consider the concordat in due course.

Police (Gas Sprays)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his responsibilities are in relation to Government policy on the use by police of (a) MIBK and (b) CS gas spray. [92639]

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92665]

Mr. Michael: In undertaking my official duties, it has been my practice to use both road and rail travel, whichever is the most expedient and efficient. I last travelled by train on 16 March 1999 from Port Talbot to London.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Travel

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many kilometres have been travelled on his Department's business in each of the last three years broken down by (a) foot, (b) bike, (c) bus, (d) train, (e) tram, (f) light-rail, (g) plane, (h) motorbike, (i) car, (j) taxi, (k) river-taxi and (l) other modes of transport; what plans and targets his Department has to reduce the kilometres travelled by private transport by his Department's employees; and if he will make a statement. [91021]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 13 July 1999]: The information on business travel is not collected in the form requested and therefore cannot be provided. As published in the Integrated Transport White Paper in July 1998, the Government have set a target that all Government Department headquarters buildings and main buildings occupied by Executive Agencies and Government Offices for the Regions should have green transport plans by March 1999 and all other key buildings by March 2000.

It has been agreed with the Government Office for London that an office of our size is not required to produce a specific plan.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number, grade and previous experience of his staff in (a) London and (b) Edinburgh; [91321]

(2) how many staff he plans to employ during the next 12 months in (a) his London Office and (b) Scotland; and what will be the grade of those staff. [91400]

Dr. Reid: The staffing of my office is currently the subject of review following the establishment of the Scottish Executive and I will make a statement on any proposed changes when necessary.

At present the number and grades of staff in post in (a) London and (b) Scotland are as follows:

	(a) London	(b) Scotland
Senior Civil Service	3	—
Special Advisers	1	1
C2	1	—
C1	1	1
B3	2	—
B2	1(1)	(1)
B1	2(1)	—
A3	12(1)	1(2)
A1	4	—
Total	27(3)	3(3)

The figures are actual staff in post to which need to be added the figures in brackets which are vacancies.

The staff concerned have previously worked in either The Scottish Office or the Lord Advocate's Department and have been assigned to my office on loan from the Scottish Executive.

Ministerial Residence

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has an official residence in Scotland. [91649]

Dr. Reid: No.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92663]

Dr. Reid: On Monday 21 July.

HEALTH

Ashworth Hospital

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to publish his response to the Committee of Inquiry into the Personality Disorder Unit, Ashworth Special Hospital. [92647]

Mr. Dobson: I am today publishing my response to the Inquiry Report. Copies have been placed in the Library. We have accepted the broad substance of the Inquiry Report and are taking appropriate action to ensure that their concerns are properly addressed.

Single Currency

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much expenditure his Department (a) has incurred to date and (b) has forecast that it will incur in the future, on preparations for possible United Kingdom entry into the European single currency; and if he will make a statement. [91554]

Mr. Hutton: Following the publication of the Government's Outline National Changeover Plan, the Department is considering what preparations may be necessary.

Category D Drugs

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what category D drugs are currently not readily available in the United Kingdom; and what assessment he has made of the consequent impact on the percentage of generic drugs in the total prescribing mix. [92135]

Mr. Denham: For every drug which has been placed in category D of part VIII of the Drug Tariff it has been established that, at a particular point in time, community pharmacies in England and Wales may not be able to buy stock at the Drug Tariff price. However, we have no evidence at present of supplies being unavailable from any source, or of patients being unable to obtain the medicines that they need.

The pattern of drugs dispensed should not affect the proportion of prescriptions written generically.

Cancer Care

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total spent by each NHS Regional Executive on funding cancer care advisers in the two most recent years; and if he will make a statement. [91981]

Mr. Hutton: Each of the National Health Service Executive regional offices has an appointed cancer co-ordinator to provide a focus for maintaining cancer policy implementation. In addition, regional offices have their own arrangements for supporting this work, drawing on relevant experience both within the regional office and from the NHS more widely, including buying in expertise as and when necessary. This means that the total expenditure on cancer co-ordination and its support cannot readily be identified separately on a consistent basis across regional offices.

NHS Direct

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when NHS Direct will be made available to people living in Hendon. [92363]

Mr. Denham: NHS Direct is currently available to 2.7 million people in London and will be extended to cover a further 1.9 million people in London by December of this year. NHS Direct will cover the whole of the capital, including residents in Hendon, by the end of the year 2000.

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The National Health Service Executive established a working group to take a closer look at hearing aid services and the part they play in a modern NHS. Innovative ways of developing services in this area are currently being considered.

National Health Service Act 1977

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many public inquiries have been established under section 84 of the National Health Service Act 1977 in each of the last 10 years. [92110]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Since 1989, two public inquiries have been established under Section 84 of the National Health Service Act 1977.

They are the Bristol Royal Infirmary Inquiry, established October 1998, and the Inquiry into The Personality Disorder Unit, Ashworth Special Hospital, established February 1997.

Disability Equipment

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the current budget is for research and development work on equipment for disabled people, under section 22 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970. [92304]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The Department has no specific budget for this work, which is currently funded under the National Health Service research and development strategy and programmes including MedLINK and the Teaching Company Scheme. Details of these funding sources are listed in the annual report laid under section 22 of the Act.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals his Department has to promote research and development into disability equipment. [92303]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The Department promotes research and development work on equipment for disabled people through the annual report laid under section 22 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970. Copies are sent to research groups, charities, funding bodies, journal publishers, trade associations and other organisations. A range of programmes and schemes fund work in this field. Calls for proposals are announced on the Department's website and in relevant newsletters and journals.

Wheelchair Voucher Scheme

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the York Economic Consortium Review of the wheelchair voucher scheme will be published. [92307]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The York Health Economics Consortium has concluded its evaluation of the powered wheelchair and voucher scheme initiatives. The Consortium's report has now been received by the Department. It will be made available after it has been considered by Ministers.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on Government policy towards the use of genetically engineered pigs as sources of organs for transplant into humans. [92666]

Mr. Hutton: The use of genetically modified animals, as with all aspects of xenotransplantation, needs to be monitored closely. The United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority (UKXIRA) acts as the focal point for consideration of all xenotransplantation issues as well as advising the Government on the acceptability of specific applications to undertake xenotransplantation procedures.

The transplantation of animal tissue into humans, offers a potential solution to the current shortage of human organs and tissue for transplantation. It also offers the possibility of new treatments for conditions such as Parkinson's disease. Clearly, there are many difficulties yet to be overcome with this new technology, not least the problem of rejection of tissue transplanted between different species. The genetic modification of animals, most notably pigs, may provide a solution to this problem.

The view of the UKXIRA and of the Government is that, while recognising that the problems in this field are not to be underestimated, the potential of xenotransplantation should continue to be explored.

Community Hospitals (Oxfordshire)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to make an announcement on (a) the future arrangements for community hospitals in Oxfordshire and (b) the future of Bicester Community hospital. [92646]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State fully recognises the concerns of the local community on this issue.

He has instructed officials at the National Health Service Executive South East Regional Office to explore further the feasibility of variations put forward by Oxfordshire Health Authority and Oxfordshire Community Health NHS Trust.

The matter has now been referred to my right hon. Friend who will be carefully considering all options before reaching a final decision on the future arrangements for community hospitals in Oxfordshire and the future of Bicester Community Hospital.

Health Checks

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it his policy to encourage general practitioners to offer regular medical checks of their patients who are over the age of 75 years; and if he will make a statement. [92908]

Mr. Hutton: Under their terms of service, general practitioners are required to invite all patients who have reached the age of 75 for an annual health check in the patient's home, or in the surgery if the patient prefers. General practitioners make arrangements with health authorities to provide services and regional offices of the National Health Service Executive hold health authorities to account for the services provided in their area.

Dialysis

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reciprocal arrangements are in place for dialysis between the NHS and the island of Jersey. [92670]

Mr. Denham: There are no reciprocal arrangements for dialysis as part of regular, planned treatment though emergency care is available for conditions arising unexpectedly during a temporary visit.

Donor Cards

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the budgeted expenditure has been for the promotion of the donor card scheme over the last three years. [92673]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is:

1996–97	1,225,231
1997–98	457,960
1998–99	1,527,692

Referral

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the specific circumstances are where a general practitioner must obtain prior approval for an out-of-area treatment referral; [92671]

(2) what the specific circumstances are where a general practitioner must obtain prior approval for referral (a) to a specialised service, (b) to a specialist mental health service for deaf people and (c) for a cochlear implant. [92672]

Mr. Denham: The out of area treatment arrangements are used where pre-arranged service agreements are impractical, primarily for emergency situations. As made clear in Health Service Circular 1999–117 "The New NHS: Guidance on Out of Area Treatment", there is no formal prior approval mechanism for referrals under the out of area treatment arrangements.

In some cases, there may be local accountability arrangements in place setting out clinical protocols for making referrals for highly specialised services.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Lan Chile flights to the Falklands to re-commence. [92504]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I understand that Lan Chile are in touch with the Falkland Islands Development Corporation with a view to resuming flights to the Falklands during August if not sooner.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evaluation he has made of the effect on the economy of the Falkland Islands of the Chilean legislation passed on 9 July banning all flights to the Falklands before January 2000. [92503]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government of Chile have informed our Embassy at Santiago of their decision, in response to the joint statement issued by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and the Foreign Minister of the Argentine Republic on 14 July, to reverse their decree banning flights to the Falklands. We have made no formal assessment of the economic impact of the 9 July extension of the decree banning flights. The resumption of flights will bring social and economic benefits to the Falkland Islands and to southern Chile.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the documentation provided by the Chilean Government concerning the restoration of flights to the Falkland Islands contingent upon allowing Argentinian citizens to visit the islands. [92505]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Chilean Government have not provided us with any documentation concerning the restoration of flights to the Falkland Islands.

Kosovo

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) Kosovar Serbs and (b) members of other ethnic groups have left Kosovo since the KFOR Occupation. [92721]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: UNHCR estimate that about 170,000 Kosovar Serbs have left Kosovo. An unspecified number of Roma gypsies have also left Kosovo. There is no further breakdown of figures available. KFOR are committed to the protection of everyone in Kosovo whatever their ethnicity.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia's Operation Horseshoe in Kosovo. [91762]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In summer 1998, Belgrade's security forces drove at least 250,000 Kosovar Albanians from their homes and destroyed villages and crops. During the winter of 1998–99, we had information that the Serbs planned to destroy all those who they regarded as the KLA. The Racak massacre of 15 January (over 40 killed) was a reminder of Serb brutality.

Before NATO started bombing on 24 March, the Serbs had already destroyed villages and expelled the inhabitants. There were strong grounds for expecting that Milosevic was embarking on a renewed campaign of civilian casualties, with the destruction of villages and displacement of inhabitants on a scale at least as great as in 1998.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the criteria used by his Department for issuing public interest immunity certificates; and what plans he has to amend these criteria. [92731]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Government policy on the use of public interest immunity certificates was set out in a statement by my right hon. and Learned Friend the Attorney-General on 11 July 1997, Official Report, columns 616–17. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Prime Minister on 28 June 1999, Official Report, columns 18–19. All certificates signed by FCO Ministers since 1 May 1997 have been issued in full accordance with the policy set out in those statements. I have no plans to seek amendment to it.

Entry Refusals

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to place in the Library the report for 1998 by Dame Elizabeth Anson, relating to refusal of entry clearance where there is no right of appeal. [93260]

Mr. Hoon: I have arranged for copies of Dame Elizabeth's 1998 Report to be placed in the Library. I welcome the Report and note Dame Elizabeth's recommendations, which will receive careful consideration.

Irian Jaya

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set up an inquiry into events at Irian Jaya in May 1996 during the rescue of four British citizens; what British forces were involved in the rescue; and what transport bearing what markings was used. [92301]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 22 July 1999]: We have no plans to hold an inquiry. British hostages were successfully freed but sadly during the rescue two Indonesian hostages and some Indonesian troops were killed. We do not comment on the operational aspects of kidnap cases.

Gough Island

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and UNESCO World Heritage Centre about the adequacy of the monitoring of fishing grounds around the Gough Island Wildlife Reserve. [87490]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 29 June 1999]: In order to ensure that all relevant papers on this subject were located it was necessary to consult The Administrator of Tristan Da Cunha, the British Embassy and UK Delegation to UNESCO in Paris, the Department for International Development and various FCO Departments. I am now confident that we have located all relevant correspondence and will be placing copies in the Libraries of the House.

Data Series

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new data series separated by gender, race, disability and age have been commissioned by his Department since June 1997. [90830]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No new data series separated by gender, race, disability and age have been commissioned by the FCO since June 1997, although a number of existing data series are routinely analysed in this way.

Recruitment, resignation and appraisal figures are routinely analysed by race, gender and disability. The number of staff in each grade is also broken down annually by gender, race and disability. A number of other data series separated by gender, race, disability and age continue to be analysed on an ad hoc basis.

EU Council Meetings

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government propose to take to publicise in advance the agendas of all meetings of the European Council and Councils of Ministers and their working groups; and what plans the current Presidency of the Union has on this issue. [90972]

Ms Quin: There are no formal agendas for European Councils. But it is normal for the Foreign Secretary to give oral evidence to the Foreign Affairs Committee on the topics most likely to be discussed. Regular European Councils are also preceded by a debate on the floor of the House.

As regards Council of Ministers meetings, we regularly inform Parliament about details of EU business. The European Scrutiny Committee is also informed of relevant agenda items before each Council of Ministers meeting, and a copy of the information routinely placed in the Library of the House.

We understand that the Finnish Presidency intends to post the agendas of both Council of Ministers and Coreper meetings on the Internet and that Council working group agendas will be available on request from the Finnish Permanent Representation to the EU in Brussels.

Appointments (Quangos)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92127]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and his Ministers made (a) 21 appointments between 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 40 between 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999.

In (a) one appointee was a member of Britain's Asian community.

In (b) six appointees were members of ethnic minority groups, not all were Asian.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is committed to increasing the percentage of women, and members of minority ethnic groups appointed to FCO sponsored NDPBs. The FCO departmental action plan for NDPB's sets objectives and targets for improving representation in these groups. Full details can be found in "Opening up Public Appointments" pages 18 and 19. This was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 25 May 1999.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stephen Lawrence Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs of the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry, including the costs arising from the publication by the Inquiry of the names of the witnesses in Appendix 11 of the Inquiry's report; and if he will make a statement. [93265]

Mr. Straw: The final costs of the Inquiry have yet to be determined as there are outstanding bills for settlement in terms of legal fees. However, the costs incurred to date are:

Pay and allowances, inquiry team, advisors and civil servants	667,000
Accommodation and associated costs	710,000
Legal representation and treasury solicitors costs	2,045,000
Miscellaneous running costs	777,000
Total	4,199,000

This provides a total cost to date of £4.199 million. I have accepted the recommendation of Sir William Macpherson, chairman of the Inquiry, that the Metropolitan Police Service should, in accordance with section 49(5) of the Police Act 1996, meet the full costs of setting up and establishing the Inquiry, together with all costs which directly accrued from Part 1 of the Inquiry relating to the police investigation of the murder of Stephen Lawrence. These costs amount to £3.170 million to date of the total costs and these have been met by the Metropolitan Police.

I have also accepted Sir William's recommendation that the costs of Part 2 of the Inquiry, on the future handling of racially motivated crime, should be met by the Home Office as the findings were of more general application.

I have always made clear that we would take steps to remedy the serious problems caused to a number of people by the Inquiry's error in publishing Appendix 11 of the Inquiry's report in full. Arrangements have, therefore, been made to reimburse the costs arising from the need of 18 families and individuals to be moved by Greenwich Council or to sell their houses. The final amount spent for this purpose, including staff costs incurred by the Council, is not yet known but is likely to be about £650,000.

Mr. Louis Farrakhan

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on whether the exclusion from the United Kingdom of Mr. Louis Farrakhan is to be maintained. [93266]

Mr. Straw: Last year, I informed Mr. Farrakhan that I was minded to maintain his exclusion from the United Kingdom on the grounds that his presence here would not be conducive to the public good for reasons of race relations and the maintenance of public order. Mr. Farrakhan was offered the opportunity to make further representations before I made my final decision.

I have carefully reviewed the case for his continued exclusion in the light of Mr. Farrakhan's representations and other relevant material. I have concluded that it remains the case that the exclusion of Mr. Farrakhan from the United Kingdom is conducive to the public good. Mr. Farrakhan's representatives have been informed of my decision today.

Passport Agency

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the United Kingdom Passport Agency Business Plan 1998–99 and annual report will be published. [93264]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Proof copies of the Passport Agency's Annual Report were today placed in the Library. The report will be printed and issued by September.

The Agency's Business Plan has, exceptionally, been deferred to later in the year in order that it will more accurately reflect the Agency's position in light of the difficulties experienced earlier this year.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's most recent quarterly analysis of the UK Passport Agency's customer service. [92555]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Regular postal surveys of customer opinion take place on a two-monthly basis. In addition, surveys of personal callers are carried out by individual passport offices on a quarterly basis. Copies of the analyses of the most recent surveys have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the difference to the Passport Agency's running costs from relocating the London Passport Office and the UK Passport Agency headquarters to Eccleston Square. [92499]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This was assessed when the relocation business case was prepared in December 1997, and will be looked at again as part of the Agency's re-assessment of the business case which is now taking place.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the backlog of unprocessed passport applications (a) at each office of the United Kingdom Passport Agency and (b) in total for the last week for which the information is available. [92776]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of unprocessed applications at week ending 18 July 1999 was:

	Number
London	8,144
Liverpool	153,065
Peterborough	57,090
Newport	94,310
Glasgow	98,772
Belfast	6,981
Total	418,362

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the cost to public funds of refurbishing 89 Eccleston Square and of relocating the UK Passport Agency headquarters and the London Passport Office to that address. [92498]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A full business case and cost-benefit analysis covering a number of options for the relocation of the United Kingdom Passport Agency headquarters and the London Passport Office was carried out in December 1997. A further assessment took place when Bridge Place, 89 Eccleston Square—an existing Government leasehold property was identified. This found that Bridge Place offered best value for money of all the options considered by the Passport Agency. The business case is now being re-examined in the light of the Agency's operational difficulties this year, and other relevant factors.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the nature and duration of the disruption to services to members of the public which would be caused by the re-location of the London Passport Office and the Passport Agency headquarters to Eccleston Square. [92501]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member on 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 402, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, has yet to approve the Passport Agency's proposals for relocation from Clive House. Clearly an important element in the project planning will be measures to ensure that services to members of the public are not disrupted.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average processing time, for the last week for which the information is available, for correctly completed, straightforward applications submitted (a) in person and (b) by post at each office of the United Kingdom Passport Agency. [92779]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Agency does not collect the information in the form requested. It does collect weekly information on the maximum processing time for each office for correctly completed non-urgent applications.

The last week for which information is available is 18 July and figures are:

	Number
Belfast	7
London	5
Newport	35
Liverpool	43
Peterborough	28
Glasgow	51

These figures need to be treated with caution because the Agency prioritises travel dates. Those who are travelling in July and August will get priority. New applications with urgent travel dates are not placed at the back of the queue, but are dealt with promptly. Currently, all July travel dates are cleared except for any new applications coming in on each day. Offices are now processing August dates of travel. Some work from Glasgow is being transferred to Belfast and London to expedite processing.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many expired passports have been renewed for 10 years since the beginning of 1999. [92775]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This information is not available as the United Kingdom Passport Agency does not keep records on Passport renewals that differentiate between the previous passport being expired or still valid.

European Court of Human Rights

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what approach he is making to the European Court of Human Rights over the cases of Euan Sutherland and Christopher Morris. [93261]

Mr. Straw: We have today, with the agreement of the applicants, sought a further extension from the European Court of Human Rights in the stayed cases of Sutherland and Morris versus the United Kingdom.

We have informed the Court, in the context of this request, that the Government intend to re-introduce the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Bill next Session and if necessary, the Parliament Acts will be used to secure its passage.

Prison Service (Performance Indicators)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the results achieved by the Prison Service on each of its key performance indicators in each prison during 1998–99. [91900]

Mr. Straw: The final key performance indicator (KPI) results achieved by the Prison Service and by each prison are given in the tables. The overcrowding KPI is formulated in terms of overall Prison Service capacity and population levels and is not applicable to individual prisons. Cost per place data are provisional pending final audit of the appropriation account for the Prison Service annual voted expenditure.

I am pleased to report that today I have placed before Parliament, the Prison Service Agency's Annual Report and Accounts, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Jill Dando

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the police investigation of the murder of Jill Dando. [92030]

Kate Hoey: This investigation is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. He tells me that the investigation is being pursued as expeditiously as possible.

Bargoed Fire Station

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will review the decision to close the Bargoed Fire Station; [92243]

(2) what evidence he received about the possible time it would take for a fire appliance to reach New Tredegar from the Cefn Forest Fire Station, during his consideration of the proposed closure of the Bargoed Fire Station. [92245]

Mr. George Howarth: On 23 June 1998, my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary, approved the application by the South Wales Fire Authority, under section 19 (4) of the Fire Services Act 1947, to remove a pumping appliance and associated firefighting posts from Bargoed fire station. My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary's decision was taken in the light of advice from Her Majesty's Fire Service Inspectorate that the national standards of fire cover would continue to be maintained if the application was approved. That advice included confirmation that a timed run undertaken by the fire brigade suggested a pumping appliance from Cefn Forest should in normal circumstances be able to reach New Tredegar within the recommended attendance time for the substantive fire risk category for that area.

Following my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary's decision, implementation of the proposals is now a matter for the Fire Authority. Closure of Bargoed fire station was not at issue and a further section 19 application would be required if the Authority was to make such a proposal.

Immigration Rules

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the concession to immigration rules in respect of the one year rule and domestic violence. [92467]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I plan to review the concession after it has been in operation for at least one year.

Merseyside Police

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the crime reduction and community involvement programme, Operation Arrow, in the South Sefton district of the Merseyside Police Authority; and if he will make a statement. [92261]

Kate Hoey: If we are to make a lasting impact upon crime levels, we must engage the support of local communities. Operation Arrow seeks to achieve this by engaging all sectors of the community in South Sefton, understanding their concerns and needs, and then providing a swift and effective response. Early results are encouraging; Merseyside Police and their partners in the initiative are to be congratulated on this innovative approach to improving community safety.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the Merseyside Police Authority revenue budget was spent on civilian support staff in the last year for which figures are available. [92260]

Kate Hoey: The Merseyside Police Authority's financial estimates for 1999–2000, as recorded by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance Accountancy (CIPFA), show that the force will commit around 12 per cent. of its net revenue expenditure of £249.5 million to salary costs for civilian support staff.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings he held with (a) officials in the United States Department of Justice and (b) the Baltimore police department during his visit to the United States of America between 4 and 6 February 1998; and if he will list the date of each meeting, the location of each meeting and the names of the United States officials who took part in each meeting. [92282]

Mr. Straw: When I visited the United States of America in February last year I attended four meetings with officials in the United States Department of Justice and one meeting with the Baltimore police department.

Tobacco

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Magistrates' Association about implementation of the proposed Draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising and Promotion) Regulations 1999. [R] [92247]

Mr. Straw: To date, I have had no meetings to discuss the proposed Draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising) Regulations 1999, although I have met with the Magistrates Association previously on other matters.

Mrs. Christine Soyal

Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mrs. Christine Soyal, a constituent of the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills, may expect the return of her passport and driving licence, submitted in support of her husband's application to remain in the country on 19 July 1998. [92300]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Mrs. Soyal's passport and driving licence were returned to her on Tuesday 20 July 1999.

Schengen Acquis

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those items of the Schengen Acquis listed in the Official Journal of 10 July, which (a) had not been deposited in the Library and (b) had not been seen by his officials (i) prior to the decision being made for the UK to join elements of Schengen and (ii) to date; and if he will make a statement. [92832]

Kate Hoey: At the time of the decision to make a formal application for the United Kingdom to participate in certain elements of the Schengen acquis, which was submitted by letter on 20 May 1999, all the Decisions and Declarations of the Schengen acquis listed in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 10 July 1999 had been seen by officials of the Home Office and had been sent to the Scrutiny Committees of both Houses.

Data Protection

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to lay before the House subordinate legislation under the Data Protection Act 1998; and if he will make a statement. [92702]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey) on 12 July, Official Report, column 73.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that the code of practice on the welfare of xenotransplantation source animals strictly limits the early removal of piglets from their mothers. [92668]

Mr. George Howarth: It is likely that, in some circumstances, the early removal of piglets from their mothers will be essential in order to establish colonies of animals with the health status (i.e. the absence of particular pathogens) that will be necessary to minimise the risk of infection to the recipient. This will, however, require suitable project licence authority and will be allowed only where there is a demonstrable need to eliminate particular micro-organisms. All practicable safeguards will be put in place to protect the welfare of piglets.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 333, what progress has been made with the investigation into Harlan UK Ltd; if he has received the advice on whether there is a need to suspend the establishment's certificate of designation for which he asked; and if he will make a statement. [92718]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw) on 14 July 1999, Official Report, columns 206–07, and to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on 21 July 1999, Official Report, columns 527–28.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will require Imutron's programme of breeding genetically engineered pigs to be suspended pending the finalisation of the code of practice on the welfare of xenotransplantation source animals. [92667]

Mr. George Howarth: Licences and certificates can be suspended under the terms of section 13 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 only if it appears that this is urgently necessary for the welfare of any protected animal. There are no such grounds for suspending the relevant licences.

The existing "Codes of Practice for the Housing and Care of Animals Used in Scientific Procedures" apply to these animals, as do the terms and conditions of the licences under which they are held.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the advantages of (a) legally binding regulations and (b) a non-binding code of practice to protect genetically engineered pigs. [92669]

Mr. George Howarth: The codes of practice issued under section 21(2) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are legally enforceable. Section 21(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 allows any failure to comply with such a code of practice to be taken into account in any criminal or civil proceedings.

In addition, we have recently amended the standard conditions that apply to all designated establishments to require that approved areas be maintained to the standards set out in the codes of practice, unless otherwise authorised. Under section 10(7) of the Act, failure to comply with such a condition is a ground for the variation or revocation of the certificate. If pigs are not maintained to the standards set out in the new code of practice, authority to maintain these animals can be withdrawn.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present cost of a weighted unit of output for asylum, after-entry, enforcement and nationality casework. [92785]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: For the purposes of monitoring the performance of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate under the terms of the Casework Programme contract with Siemens Business Services, the unit cost of a basic casework decision is determined each month. The costs of more complex decisions may be estimated by combining the cost of the basic decision with the weighting attached to a unit output. The unit cost of a basic decision in May was £34.73. The costs of more complex decisions may, therefore, be expressed as is given in the table:

Type of output	Cost
After Entry Casework	44.10
Asylum Casework	314.65
Nationality Casework	52.85
Deportation Casework	1,241.45
Illegal Entry Casework	572.60

These costs exclude any productivity-related payments that may subsequently be due to Siemens.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is towards the proposed conveyance of (a) residence conditions and (b) financial support payments for asylum seekers and refugees in member states of the European Union. [92782]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government provide information on British immigration and asylum matters to member states of the European Union through the normal channels associated with the European Union at both ministerial and official level.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many failed asylum seekers were removed from the United Kingdom between (a) 1 January and 30 June 1997, (b) 1 January and 30 June 1998 and (c) 1 January and 30 June 1999. [92789]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Data on removals and voluntary departures of asylum applicants, excluding dependants, are given in the table.

Removals and voluntary departures [1] of asylum applicants, excluding dependants, First Half 1997, First Half 1998, First Half 1999 [2]

Dates	Number of persons
1 January to 30 June 1997	3,370
1 January to 30 June 1998	3,105
1 January to 30 June 1999[2]	3,650

[1] For port applicants, the data include any voluntary departure up to and including notification of the decision on the asylum application but excludes any subsequent departure. For in-country applicants the data include 'voluntary' departures following enforcement action but exclude voluntary departures where enforcement action had not been initiated. Some persons may leave voluntarily without the knowledge of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate
[2] 1999 data are provisional

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the backlog in dealing with failed asylum seekers liable for removal at the latest date for which information is available. [92781]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at November 1998, the latest date for which a figure is available, the estimated backlog of failed asylum seekers liable for removal was 24,000. That figure represents a snapshot, taken from Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) port and enforcement databases, of failed asylum seekers, excluding dependants, who have exhausted their rights of appeal (including any who did not submit an appeal against the refusal of asylum) and who are liable for removal. The figure does not include any failed in-country asylum applicants against whom enforcement action has not commenced. Some persons included in the backlog figure may have actually departed from the United Kingdom without IND's knowledge.

The backlog includes a large number of cases where there are one or more barriers to removal such as absconding, judicial review, representations from hon. Members, or lack of necessary documentation.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many failed asylum seekers departed voluntarily in each month since January 1997. [92780]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table. The data do not include voluntary departures of in-country asylum applicants against whom enforcement action had not been initiated; the number of such departures cannot be quantified directly from Immigration and Nationality Directorate databases. Some persons may leave voluntarily without the knowledge of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and, by definition, we have no record of the number of such departures.

Voluntary departures [1] of asylum applicants, excluding dependants, 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1998 [2]

[1] For port applicants the data cover voluntary departures up to and including notification of the decision on the asylum application but exclude any subsequent departure. For in-country applicants the data cover 'voluntary' departures following enforcement action but exclude voluntary departures where enforcement action has not been initiated. Some persons may leave voluntarily without the knowledge of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate.
[2] Data for July to December 1998 are provisional estimates.

Prison Industries

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pairs of slippers were commissioned from prison industries for use in Her Majesty's prisons in the financial years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 estimated. [92551]

Mr. George Howarth: All slippers manufactured by the Prison Service were for use in Her Majesty's Prisons. The numbers of pairs made were:

1997–98: 100,000 pairs

1998–99: 101,000 pairs

1999–2000: 54,000–60,000 (estimated).

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pairs of socks were commissioned from prison industries for use in Her Majesty's prisons in the financial years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 estimated. [92552]

Mr. George Howarth: All socks manufactured by the Prison Service were for use in Her Majesty's Prisons. The numbers of pairs made were:

Year	Number
1997–98	400,000
1998–99	400,000
1999–2000	[1]600,000

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many files the Case Allocation Unit in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (a) received and (b) despatched in each week from the week ended 16 April. [92844]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The figures are:

Date	Files received	Files despatched
17 April	4,115	2,931
24 April	1,766	2,202
8 May	10,936	6,202

Date	Files received	Files despatched
26 June	3,076	1,812
3 July	4,220	1,908
10 July	3,570	1,828
17 July	3,224	1,937

[1] Includes figures for week ended 1 May.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average number of staff manning the Telephone Caller Unit in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [92840]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The current daily average number of staff logged in to the telephone system available to take calls in the Immigration and Nationality Enquiry Bureau (INEB) is 27.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the forecast outturn is for the budget of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate for 1999–2000. [92852]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The latest forecast outturn for 1999–2000 for the Immigration and Nationality Directorate is estimated as £679 million. This includes the estimated costs of providing support to asylum seekers. These costs are sensitive to a range of factors including the number of asylum applications, speed of processing and take-up rates. It is, therefore, difficult to predict with certainty the eventual cost for 1999–2000.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of cases awaiting action in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate which contain passports. [92838]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Of the applications awaiting decision in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, approximately 34,000 contain passports. These are general cases, for example, cases where spouse, student or other issues are being considered.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints of maladministration concerning the Immigration and Nationality Directorate have been notified to his Department by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration since the beginning of 1999. [92849]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration has made nine formal and two informal inquiries about complaints about the Immigration and Nationality Directorate between 1 January and 21 July 1999.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money he has paid in the current year to members of the public as compensation or as ex-gratia payments following loss or inconvenience which was due to delays in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [92837]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Approximately £13,600 has been paid in ex-gratia payments of compensation so far this year by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. Compensation is generally paid for financial loss arising from lost or misplaced passports.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of unopened letters at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [92848]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are currently no unopened letters in the Mail Handling Section. All generally addressed post is opened by this section on the day received, and all specifically addressed post is forwarded on the day of receipt to its appropriate destination. An earlier backlog of 18,000 unopened post in the Mail Handling Section was cleared in March. For special reasons, there is a separate procedure for dealing with applications and accompanying fees in the Travel Documents Case Management Unit. The letters are normally unopened until they are processed and a cashier registers the fees and issues a receipt. As at 22 July, there were 1,200 of these items.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his current estimate of trends in processing casework at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [92839]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The output of the Integrated Casework Directorate (ICD) is recovering. Radical measures are being explored to speed up the decision making process with a view to exceeding previous output.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many files from the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's Case Allocation Unit are currently stored in Acton. [92845]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No files from the Case Allocation Unit are stored in Acton.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average unit cost of caseworking in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in each month since January 1998. [92842]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 17 May 1999, Official Report, column 261.

The direct cost of caseworking is routinely monitored under the terms of the Casework Programme contract between the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and Siemens Business Services. The latest estimates of those costs, which exclude some overheads, are given in the table:

Month	Unit Cost
January 1998	39.62
February 1998	39.12
March 1998	37.93

It should be noted that unit costs are subject to revisions and final agreement with Siemens Business Services.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average daily number of callers who attended (a) the Public Caller Unit and (b) the Asylum Screening Unit at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in each month since the beginning of 1999. [92847]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The figures represent the number of callers coming into the Public Caller Unit who were issued with tickets ie the main applicants or persons with an inquiry. The figures do not include family and friends. With regard to the Asylum Screening Unit, the figures do not include family, friends, representatives and their interpreters. The average daily number of callers coming into the Public Caller Unit and the Asylum Screening Unit since the beginning of 1999 were:

Month	Public caller unit	Asylum screening unit
June	862	239
May	663	202
April	661	226
March	723	175
February	627	297
January	723	325

Non-asylum Arrivals

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present unit cost of examining non-asylum passengers arriving at ports. [92786]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Public Service Agreement contains a commitment to establish a baseline and target for this measure in 1999.

The management information systems in place do not currently enable us to separately identify the costs of dealing with non-asylum passengers, and we are currently considering how best to develop a comprehensive efficiency measure for the port operation.

The Home Office Business Plan includes a target of reducing the unit cost of Immigration port checks to £5.43. This covers both asylum and non-asylum passengers. The Immigration Service expects to meet this target for this financial year.

Leave to Remain

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average time taken by him to determine an application excluding asylum-related cases by a person with limited leave under the Immigration Act 1971 to enter or remain in the United Kingdom for further leave. [92846]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The time taken to determine an application for variation of leave to remain will depend on the complexity of individual cases. It is not possible, therefore, to give an average time to deal with such cases. Applications which can be dealt with as fast track cases (currently about 40 per cent.) are at present being determined within about four weeks of the date of application. More complex applications may require lengthy examination including further inquiries and it is not possible to estimate how long it would take to determine such applications.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Working Party on Electoral Procedures has proposed in its interim report that political parties should not have access to the full electoral register for membership and fund-raising purposes. [92727]

Mr. George Howarth: The Working Party has recommended that the full register should continue to be available to electoral users as at present. The final report of the Working Party, which will be put forward later this summer, will describe in more detail the electoral purposes for which it will be made available.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place on the internet a complete list of the business and charitable organisations which responded to his consultation on the commercial sale of the electoral register. [92726]

Mr. George Howarth: In the absence of permission from all the organisations concerned, we do not intend to do so.

Airline Liaison Officers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many airline liaison officers were stationed abroad on (a) 31 May 1997, (b) 31 May 1998 and (c) 31 May 1999. [92788]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of Airline Liaison Officers in post on both 31 May 1997 and 31 May 1998 was five and the number on 31 May 1999 was 11.

Visa (Jamaican Nationals)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to require visas from Jamaican nationals travelling to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [92500]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have no immediate plans to introduce a visa regime for nationals of Jamaica, but the Government keep the need for visa regimes throughout the world under constant review.

After-entry Applications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many after-entry applications were decided in each month from January 1997 to the most recent month for which information is available. [92836]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Data for January 1997 to May 1999 are given in the table.

Victims (Criminal Proceedings)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress made with his Department's pilot project to assess how victims' views might be taken into account in criminal proceedings. [92549]

Kate Hoey: The pilot project was completed earlier this year. An evaluation of the project has been carried out by researchers from Bristol University and a final report will be published in early September. Later that month, a special conference will be held at which criminal justice practitioners can discuss the findings and other matters relating to the role of the victim in criminal proceedings, and make recommendations.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the evaluation by Bristol University of his pilot project to assess how victims' views might be taken into account in criminal proceedings. [92550]

Kate Hoey: The evaluation report will be published in early September. A copy will be placed in the Library at the earliest opportunity.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizenship applications were determined in each month from January 1997 to the latest month for which information is available. [92787]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of citizenship applications concluded each month from January 1997 to June 1999 are shown in the table:

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 335

SESSION 1998–99

12th July—23rd July 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
